Judge Berates Parents Who Let Young Baby Die

Chicago — (AP) — The parents of a dead baby remained silent in Family Court last week while a judge took them to task for their refusal on religious grounds to permit a blood transfusion which might have saved the infant's life.

The 3-day-old baby died on Jan. 14, several hours after the parents refused to sign a waiver which would have permitted an immediate Family Court hearing on the question of legally forcing a transfusion.

The parents, Thomas Grzyb, 20 and Barbara, 18, are members of the Jehovah's Witnesses religious sect.
