Karabeth Thrives...

world. This couldn't be the world I had known only yesterday morning. How could things change so quickly? I prayed constantly and my prayers were answered.

Husband Calls. Zeb called the hospital and said Karabeth was getting along all right. He would call every day.

Some days he would say she had gained an ounce and that was good news. Mother stayed with me, hoping every day that we would be able to bring Karabeth home.

As soon as I was able to drive, Mother, Zeb, and I went to Wilmington to see her. I could hardly wait. We stood by the nursery peering in the window waiting for a glimpse.

The nurse held Karabeth up for us to see. She was taking a bottle and had a ring of milk around her mouth. She yawned, wrinkled up her tiny face and was asleep.

How I yearned to touch her, to hold her! We talked with the doctor, who assured us she was getting along well. He was feeding her under the skin. She was gaining weight but he had no idea when she would be discharged.

We moved to a larger and more convenient apartment. Karabeth's bassinet with the pink satin, white net, and pink ribbons was still waiting for her to come home. Christmas passed. On Dec. 29, we heard the news we had been waiting so long to hear. We could come for our baby. She was about to kick the end of her bed out.

I was so excited and happy. Mrs. Rena Edwards, a friend, and I went for her on Dec. 30.

I waited for the doctor to talk to me and give me complete instructions and Karabeth's formula. A nurse brought Karabeth to me, dressed in her own clothes for the first time.

Every article was snow white and there was a tiny pink baby down in the white blanket. She weighed 5 pounds 4 ounces. The precious bundle was so light I could hardly believe there was a baby in it. I peered every few minutes to see if I were just dreaming.

I was walking on air when I left the hospital. My happiness was complete again.

Karabeth Cries. The first month was a nightmare. Karabeth cried so much of the time. I had a 24-hour job. I never knew there was so much to do for a baby, but I was a young foolish mother and did so much that was really unnecessary.

I was so afraid something would happen to her — that I would do something wrong. I would spend three hours trying to get her to take an ounce of milk. However, she thrived and at the end of two months she weighed 9 pounds 14 ounces.

Karabeth ... at 11 months

We weighed her in the hydrator pan from the refrigerator for a long time. Karabeth grew and gained weight. She was the picture of health. When she was seven months old she could have toast, but the tiniest crumb would choke her and frighten Zeb and I out of our wits.

We tried several times to get her to eat toast, but every time she would choke so we gave it up. I noticed she did not kick or use her legs and feet as actively as other children. My friends and doctor told me it was just because she was premature and just give her time.

Karabeth was in good health and never sick. She was over a year old before she had a cold.

Grandfather Visits. Zeb's father spent the summer with us, Karabeth's second summer. How he enjoyed her! She was just a little doll, beginning to talk well and do such cute things. I think he enjoyed rocking her to sleep most of all.

After she would fall asleep, he would hold her for a long time. I would go to put her in her crib and he would say, "Bless her little heart, she has gone to sleep."

We had her spoiled about that good and proper. Every time she went to sleep we rocked her. Karabeth called Zeb's father, Mr. Mauney, "Papoo" and cried after him every time he left the house. She is the Mauney's only grandchild and she is really grand to "Papoo."

Papa made a wonderful garden. Karabeth enjoyed riding down to it in her buggy and playing with the vegetables and flowers while we worked.

In April Karabeth had measles at the age of 16 months. She was
