This Is Our Story

We Discover Karabeth Had Clot in Brain at Birth

Part II

Karabeth sat alone when she was nine months old. She started pulling herself in her playpen and "walking" around in it when she was a year old. Yet she still crawled on the flat of her stomach.

When she was 18 months old and had not started walking I began to wonder why. I had expected her to walk early because when she was only three months old I would let her pretend she was walking on the bed.

She would step all over the bed while I held her. I did not walk until I was 16 months old. The Mauneys assured me it was a Mauney trait. Zeb did not walk until he was 23 months old. Everyone assured me there was nothing wrong, she was just premature, give her time.

Holland Millis, son of one of my friends, was nine months younger than Karabeth. I held his hands one day and I noticed he hardly put any weight on my hands while Karabeth put all her weight on my hands.

I asked Mary Catherine, Holland's mother, to try them to see the difference. I began to search for an answer. I took Karabeth to a doctor in Morehead City. He gave her a thorough examination and said her health was perfect and he could find nothing wrong with her.

However, it was not normal for a child of her age not to be walking. All I got was the same old answer: she is premature, give her time. I felt there was some reason why Karabeth could not walk. I couldn't wait for time so I kept searching.

I took Karabeth to a clinic in New Bern Oct. 5, 1949. We had a long tiresome waiting period. It was after lunch before our turn came.

Specialist Examines Baby

A doctor from Raleigh examined Karabeth. He said, "She has had an inner cranial hemorrhage at birth and there is a clot of blood which will have to dissolve."

"It may be two years or more before she walks. You put her between your knees and try to teach her to balance herself. Work at this one hour each day."

I worked hard and long at this but I couldn't see the slightest improvement. I would stand her with her back to the wall and try to get her to walk to me.

I took Karabeth back to the clinic for checkups. Each time we had a long and tiresome day.

During the summer of 1949 we visited my aunt in South Carolina. My aunt told me one of her friends had a child who was handicapped. He had cerebral palsy.

She told me that her friend, Ruby, had learned in her years of searching about a doctor who was world famous. She took her son to be examined by him in New York City.

Ruby had a nurse to take Jimmy to the doctor's school in Florida for the winter. The nurse had learned to give Jimmy physical therapy and take care of him.

Jimmy was improving but he was far more afflicted than Karabeth. My aunt wondered if Karabeth might have cerebral palsy and wanted me to talk with Ruby. I was very anxious to go, for here was a new ray of hope.

That night we went to see Ruby. She told me everything she knew and I met Jimmy. Ruby showed me the braces the doctor had ord-

Karabeth at 21 months looked as normal as any healthy youngster. With her toy telephone up set at her feet, she seems to be saying, "That long distance operator just WON'T answer!"

ered for Jimmy, his special table, chair, and tricycle. There were parallel bars in the back yard for him to practice walking between.

(Tuesday: We Go to New York)

Doctor Writes Book

Ruby gave me a book written by the doctor. He too was a victim of cerebral palsy and was badly handicapped. He had a long hard struggle, but graduated from an outstanding university. He decided to become a doctor and help other victims of cerebral palsy.

As I read the book I knew Karabeth had cerebral palsy. There are several types of cerebral palsy. Some have excess motion, some not enough, and some are rigid. It is caused by an injury to the brain. The injury is permanent and can never be cured.

It affects the control of muscles or joints, the motor center of the brain. Other parts of the brain must be taught to do what the damaged part was to do.

These children must have help and lots of it. They must be taught by constant repetition, which means hard work and long hours.

Physiotherapy to learn to walk, speech therapy to learn to talk, occupational therapy to learn to help themselves so that they may be independent.

There are far more children born with cerebral palsy than there are victims of polio. There is a child born with cerebral palsy every hour.

These children usually have a normal I. Q. Sometimes higher than average than other children. I will not attempt to tell you more about cerebral palsy for I realize my knowledge of it is still limited.

FINER FARMS FOR '54!

This week is "Challenge Week" and Carteret Farmers are meeting the challenge. They're planning now for better farm practices that will pay off for years to come.

We, at CP&L, appreciate the importance of the job you are doing. In recognition of that importance, CP&L will again sponsor the Finer Farms Contest in the 1954 Finer Carolina Program. The 1953 Entries are in the hands of the judges now and the winners of the $2800 in cash prizes will be announced soon.

Complete details on the new 1954 Contest will follow shortly thereafter.

So let's all do more in '54 to build finer farms — a Finer Carolina — a finer future for ourselves and our children.
