Tin Can Phones Serve Villages

Kuala Lumpur, Malaya—(AP)—A tin can telephone system is providing communications for Malay villages in five areas in Kelantan state, north Malaya.

The Telecommunications Department disclosed existence of these phones in a warning issued to the villagers to have them dismantled as wires from their phone networks were interfering with regular government lines whenever they fell across them.

The Department said in a statement it "applauds the initiative of the people" and promised to fix up a field telephone system for them. The tin can phone system consists of two cans. One end of each can is cut out and through the other end a hole is made. The ends of a length of wire, linking two villages, are attached to the cans through the holes. The open end of the can is the mouthpiece as well as the earpiece of the phone. As one speaker talks into the open end, the listener at the other end has the open end to his ear.
