Production Snarls Delay Polio Serum Inoculations

Due to delays in the manufacture of the trial polio vaccine the nationwide validity tests are expected to get under way in late March or early April, it was announced today by Basil O'Connor, president of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

Mr. O'Connor said it had been hoped that the injection of school children taking part in the tests could begin in February, but he added:

"We have been confronted with some of the usual production problems that have to be expected in the manufacture of any new product. Added to these has been the length of time required to check and re-check the many processes involved in converting the results of any laboratory research into commercial production on a large scale. More of the problems encountered is insuperable and all are being rapidly solved."

Mr. O'Connor also said: "While production problems have postponed the date for the start of the trials, we plan to inoculate a sufficient number of children before June to determine scientifically the value of this product."

Steps Complicated
Preparation of large quantities of a trial vaccine involves a series of complicated steps, Mr. O'Connor explained.

"The virus is grown in tissue culture, a new technique," he stated. "Most of it is grown at the Connaught Medical Research Laboratories of the University of Toronto, where the tissue-culture process has been studied since 1949 under a grant from the National Foundation. More than sixty different ingredients are used to grow the virus in tissue culture, he said.

Polio virus grown in this way is shipped to pharmaceutical and biological concerns for conversion into vaccine, which requires several weeks.

Subjected to Tests
Each lot of the vaccine is subjected to safety tests by three independent laboratories: the manufacturer's laboratory, the Virus Research Laboratory of the University of Pittsburgh and the Laboratory of Biologics Control of the National Institutes of Health in Washington.

The vaccine to be tested was developed under a March of Dimes grant by Dr. Jonas E. Salk of the University of Pittsburgh and is currently being produced on a non-profit basis by Cutter Laboratories, Berkeley, Calif.; Eli Lilly and Co., Indianapolis; Parke, Davis & Co., Detroit; Pitman-Moore Co., Indianapolis, and Wyeth Laboratories, Philadelphia.

Dr. Salk announced recently that he was extending his studies to at least 5,000 persons in Allegheny County, Penna., before the start of the National Foundation field trials. He was unable to resume this work earlier because polio cases continued to occur through December in that area.

The vaccine trials are being organized with the advice of the National Foundation's scientific committees and that of special committees appointed by the Associa-

Geologist Studies Jawbone

This is the lower left jawbone of a blue whale fossilized. Dr. Stephen C. Taber, geologist at the University of South Carolina, is shown measuring it. He says it is the "largest fossil bone I have ever seen." Blue whales still live and are the largest mammals known. This bone was found at low tide on the Myrtle, S. C. beach. It's nearly 12 1/2 feet long.

NEWS BRIEFS

Stove Overheats
Morehead City firemen were called to the E. C. Willis home on 14th street at 2:55 p.m. yesterday when an oil stove in the office building at the rear of the home backfired. The stove apparently got overheated. Mr. Willis called the fire department, but when it arrived the stove had cooled down, Chief Eldon Nelson said. There was no damage.

To Plant Oysters

Gehrmann Holland, assistant fisheries commissioner, has announced that preparations are being made by the state to plant seed oysters in the Point of Marsh area.

Danger Area

The area in the vicinity of Browns Inlet and Bear Inlet, will be hazardous to navigation from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Thursday and Friday because of bombing and strafing exercises, Army Engineers announced.

Division of State and Territorial Health Officers, with Dr. Hart E. Van Riper, National Foundation medical director, in charge of the project. The test areas are being selected upon recommendation of individual State Health Officers, based on scientific criteria.

Lists Compiled

Lists of all eligible counties are being compiled and studied, Mr. O'Connor said, but the final number chosen must depend upon the supply of trial vaccine available.

Mr. O'Connor said the National Foundation has received excellent cooperation from all state health officials in planning the tests. "However," he said, "no final determination of locations of trial areas can be made at this time and no definite commitment will be asked of any health officer until Dr. Salk completes his additional 5,000 inoculations in Allegheny County."
