Henry Turner Gets 60 Days, Files Appeal

Henry Turner of Beaufort was given a 60-day sentence in Beaufort Recorder's Court Tuesday. Turner was charged with public drunkenness, resisting arrest and hitting an officer. Turner was arrested by Assistant Chief of Police W. Carlton Garner early Sunday morning after being told twice to go home. When Officer Garner attempted to place him under arrest, Turner started to run and then struck the officer when he caught him. Turner appeals. Judge Mason sentenced Willie Stewart, charged with public drunkenness, to 30 days on the streets. Stewart was arrested Saturday afternoon. Jessie Parker, charged with failing to stop after being signaled to stop, driving without lights, and attempting to bribe an officer, was ordered to pay costs of court on the bribery charge. The state withdrew the other charges. Charges Dropped The state decided not to prosecute Walter Niemi, Jimmie Powell, Sammy G. Merrill, and Bradford Hudson, all charged with failing to stop at a stop sign. Judge Earl Mason observed that the above men allegedly ran, was obscured from normal vision. The state also decided not to prosecute Chauncey H. Ervin, charged with threatening his wife, Shirley Ervin, and disturbing the peace. Pay Costs Court costs were imposed on the following: Charles Calvin Jarman, Harold Franklin Raymond, Henderson Godette, and Sandy R. McLenon, all charged with failing to stop at a stop sign. James Charles Strickland and Robert William Wilms, speeding, and Annie Morris, no operator's license. Cases continued were Emory Mack Williams, failing to stop at a stop sign; and Archie W. Kennedy, failing to stop at a traffic light.

This is Our Story Friends Help Karabeth While She Recuperates at Home

Part IX By MRS. ZEB MAUNEY Karabeth's Mother (Summary: Karabeth, after under a second operation at Duke Hospital, returns to her home in Newport. Afflicted with cerebral palsy, she has spent much of her life among doctors and nurses and in hospitals. She was born prematurely in November 1946 and when she failed to walk at the age most children do, her parents had her examined by a specialist and learned that a brain hemorrhage at birth had affected her ability to use her legs.) The weather was terribly hot. Karabeth spent the day on the back porch which was the coolest spot to be found. Occasionally I would turn her on her stomach to rest her back. Her only article of clothing was a four-stringer. I only had one from the hospital but the next day Mary Catherine Millis made six for her. Delicious meals that were piping hot were brought for us to enjoy. I didn't have to plan or cook our big meals for several days. Jenny Lynn Garner brought Karabeth a lovely vase of flowers with a real butterfly that she had mounted on the flowers. Friends brought her so many things that she could play with lying down. Dode Henderson kept her in ice cream. Others brought everything you could think of to eat. Zeb made her a desk that we could clamp on her bed so that she could read or write on it. Karabeth lay flat on her back in a cast on both legs with a spreader bar between that kept her feet a foot apart. She had the best time you have ever seen a child have. Children and grownups came to play with her. Everyone said that she laughs like it did her good. She has an ever-ready smile and a very hearty laugh. Karabeth's favorite pastime was keeping a balloon and a beach ball in the air by continuously knocking it up. There were times when she would itch and be so miserable under her cast. There was nothing we could do to relieve the itching. During the night she would fight to turn on her side. Despite these two things, she was a little angel through it all. Zeb sawed the spreader bar off before we left to take her back to the hospital to have the cast removed. This made her trip much more comfortable. We had an appointment for 10 a. m., but there was a misunderstanding and it was 2 p. m. before we saw the doctor. Once again we saw her legs. By this time the staff at the cerebral palsy hospital had learned to avoid the pain and cramps that followed the removal of a cast. After the cast was sawed off I put on her day braces and locked them. Karabeth's day braces are long leg braces attached to a pelvic band. She wore these for three days and nights locked at the hip and knee joints. On the fourth night I unlocked the braces and she slept with them unlocked again the fifth night. On the sixth night she slept in her night braces. She got along beautifully. She didn't have her crutches, but would walk along the wall and around furniture. She has always had a great determination. Balance is Problem Karabeth's greatest difficulty has always been trying to balance herself, which she still has to overcome. She has had many hard falls. Her head always seems to be the most vulnerable spot. She has had many knots, bruises and cuts. I wonder sometimes how her poor head stands it. She can take a very hard fall with real evidence and marks left, without a tear. When she cries I know she has had a very bad fall. On the other hand, she has clear, good speech, a keen mind, and a vital personality. She has never been shy and made friends very quickly, regardless of age. She is very tender-hearted and will cry at the least sad thing she hears. Karabeth likes me to tell her about my girlhood days. I told her about an experience that I had in the first grade and shall never forget. I was preparing our lunch and telling about pulling down the branch of a small tree to get a glimpse of bird eggs in a nest. The older children could see and were saying how pretty they were, but I couldn't see them. Just as I pulled down the branch the little eggs fell out. The teacher was right behind me. She spanked me good. Karabeth started crying and cried until I couldn't stop her or get her to eat lunch. She has never wanted to hear that again. About a week after the cast was removed, Zeb, Karabeth, and I went to Shelby to visit Zeb's parents. Zeb's brother Hugh Wray, was home on vacation from New York City. He has always idolized Karabeth. We had a wonderful time. We brought Karabeth back by the hospital in Durham on Saturday and had to leave her. The other children were returning from their summer vacations. Weekly Sunday visits were resumed. I thought I could see Karabeth improving faster than ever before. Soon Nov. 25 came and time to celebrate Karabeth's birthday. I got permission for Karabeth to come home for the weekend. Mom and Papou Mauney came by Durham and brought her home. What a wonderful occasion! This was the first time she had had her crutches at home and could walk. She could hardly wait to go into every room. Everyone Comes Saturday we gave her a big birthday party at the educational building. All the children, regardless of age, were invited. Everyone had a grand time and were so happy to see Karabeth walking. She had the best time of all. She was so happy to see her friends. She got a mountain of presents. I never saw so many in my life. She had everything it seemed. The most lovely gifts, clothes, toys, books, a corsage made of money, banks, and more money to go in them. John and Jean Boden brought her a beautiful doll from Japan. After the party was over, we went home and there the party continued until 10 p. m. Early Sunday morning we went to Raleigh to spend the day with Janie and Fessor. She had another birthday party and dinner. We had such a happy time together. All too quickly it was over and the time had come to take her back to the hospital. It always broke my heart. She was so exhausted from the exciting weekend she fell asleep and slept all the way to Durham. She went down the hall to supper like a brave little trooper. The saddest times for me were to go back to an empty house. Karabeth's toys would be just where she left them and the house was so dead and lonely. Shortly after Karabeth's birthday I was told at the hospital that Karabeth would be discharged Dec. 18. I could hardly believe it. I was so happy and thankful for what the staff had done for her. I thanked God for everything. What a wonderful Christmas present! (Friday: The Christmas Play)

Israelites Start Protest Of Kindergarten Closing Jerusalem, Israel (AP) - A protest movement has started here to cancel the Government plan to amend the free "Compulsory Kindergarten" for five year olds. The Minister of Finance believes that the cut would mean a considerable saving on teachers' salaries hitherto paid by the State. A "Save the Kindergarten Committee" representing 10,000 parents and 103 kindergartens has been set up to convince the Government of the social disadvantages that would be caused by the closing of the "Compulsory kindergartens" probably forcing children back on the streets as many parents couldn't afford the fees demanded in private kindergartens. Public Health Nurse Gives Facts on Cerebral Palsy

(Editor's Note: In the following article, Mrs. Lota Hammer, public health nurse with the County Health Department, explains cerebral palsy, its affect and how it may be treated.) Most children learn to eat, walk, talk, sit down and stand up, without any trouble. Such acts become easy for them, because their muscles work together. Their muscles do what they want them to do, because they have control of them. A child with cerebral palsy does not have control of all of his muscles. As a result, he often finds it hard to do some of the most simple acts of everyday life. Another child with cerebral palsy may not be able to walk straight. He may stagger, reel and weave about. Still another child may have trouble with his throat and tongue. If he tries to talk, the sounds are often grunts and noises. The muscles of his face may twist and work. Along with this, he may drool. Seeing a child "making faces," and hearing the sounds he makes, give some people a wrong idea. They connect such acts with feeble-mindedness because some feeble-minded children act that way. They may even think that all children with cerebral palsy are feeble-minded. This is not true. Some of them are very bright, while some, it is true, are feeble-minded. But, you cannot tell this just by the way children with cerebral palsy look or act. Those who look and act the worst sometimes are the brightest. Mentally, the large number of them are about like other children. Is a child who has cerebral palsy always born with it? No. A great number of them are, but not all of them. Cerebral palsy can happen before birth, during birth and after birth. You can get a clue to what cerebral palsy is from the two words of its name. Cerebral means of the brain. To doctors, palsy means a weakness or lack of control of muscles. So, cerebral palsy means a weakness or lack of control of muscles due to some condition in the brain. Doctors speak of such a condition as "brain damage." This damage may result because some part of the brain did not grow or develop before birth as it should. The way a baby grows because he is born is very complicated. Something may go wrong. Something may not grow fully or develop right. For instance, a baby is born with a clubfoot, or with a cleft palate, or some such defect. With the cerebral palsy child, the defect is in some part of the brain. Sometimes the brain is damaged while a baby is being born. This could be when the mother has a hard labor. But all cerebral palsy cannot be blamed on long and hard labor. For one reason or another, it may happen even with an easy birth. Sometimes cerebral palsy can happen after birth. For example, cerebral palsy has followed whooping cough, measles, and meningitis. In rare cases it can happen after a child has convulsions. And it has been brought about by an accident—such as an automobile accident or a fall—in which the head is badly hurt. Sometimes it is the part we think and learn with. Often it is just one part of the brain that is damaged, or it may be more than one part. As would be expected, parents are apt to be very unhappy when it happens to be THEIR child who has cerebral palsy. It is also natural that they may even blame themselves—feel that it is their fault. No parents can be blamed for this. And once parents realize they are not at fault, they can give their attention to improving the situation and getting as much help as they can; like the parent who said: "I will give my child as good a life as possible—as nearly like that of other children as can be had." Parents Seek Answers When parents learn that their child has cerebral palsy, among the things they should do are: See PALS, Page 4, Section 2
