Planetarium Explains New Theory in Show

By A. F. JENZANO

A new program entitled "Stellar Populations" is being presented in the Morehead Planetarium each evening at 8:30, Saturdays at 3 and 8:30, and on Sundays at 3, 4 and 8:30 p.m.

School groups may make reservation to see a modified version of this program on Wednesdays at 2 p.m. and Thursdays at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

In this story, explanation is made of the recent astounding disclosures by eminent scientists at Palomar Mountain Observatory, the men who survey the depths of space through the giant 200 inch telescope and study other "Star Cities" and the "stellar inhabitants."

In the planetarium, the modern version of the nature of the entire universe is explained with more than a dozen actual reproductions of these majestic star cities, some invisible to the naked eye and yet hundreds of thousands of light years in diameter.

More and more astronomers are coming to believe that our solar system is not unique, but that there are other planetary systems in our own galaxy and other galaxies. Based upon this hypothesis, one then might wonder if there is another planet like Earth, supporting people and other life similar to ours.

Complex life, as we know it, is for practical scientific reasons unlikely to exist elsewhere in our own solar system. However, it is conceivable that life may exist in another solar system. Distant planets conditioned relative to their parent star, as Earth is to the sun, might well support other life somewhere in outer space.

The program will continue through March 29.

National Effort on Curbing Wrecks To Center on Roads in Rural Areas

Washington, D. C.—Rural areas of the United States will be major proving grounds for a nationwide attack on automobile accidents, it has become evident in the discussions at the White House Conference on Highway Safety, which convened here recently.

President Eisenhower opened the Conference sessions, stressing the need for urgent action, and for effective citizen leadership.

An estimated 3,000 people, representing every state in the Union, attended. Their aim is to develop a program aimed at reducing the traffic accident toll by 40 per cent during 1954. On the basis of the 1952 and 1953 death totals of more than 38,000 per year, this would mean a saving of nearly 15,000 lives.

Reports to the delegates, based upon carefully-conducted studies, indicated that more than two out of every three highway deaths are occurring on rural roads, and in small towns and villages.

One of the seven basic groups holding panel sessions to determine what can be done to reduce accidents on the highways is the Agriculture Group, the chairman of which is Charles B. Shuman, president of the Illinois Agricultural Association, and a director of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

In pledging support to the safety program, Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson pointed out that no one has a bigger stake in highway safety than the farmer. He said:

"He must use the highway in all kinds of weather, in all kinds of traffic and in all kinds of vehicles—the automobile, the truck, the tractor. And I can't think of any business whose production and distribution is hampered or disrupted more by an accident than the farm industry. The farmer traditionally is almost always short of help. An accident to himself or to one of his helpers can really hurt. "And yet farm resident suffer more fatal motor vehicle accidents than any other type of accident. Some of these tragedies are caused by farm people themselves. Many others are caused by non-farm residents who use the highways that go by farms. "The huge waste of vital farm manpower and material resources caused by accidents must be stopped. I am sure I can pledge the active help of the farm people of America in stopping them."
