Okefenokee Swamp friends are telling us... and we learn from local sources that the band of professional musicians will be in Beaufort for an adult concert at 8:30 p.m. tomorrow night in the Beaufort High School auditorium.

Pogo wants everyone to take advantage of hearing the orchestra. North Carolina (which borders the Okefenokee Country) is fortunate, he thinks, in having a professional orchestra. Most states don't. Pogo points out.

Moreover, Pogo likes the symphony because of its educational program. Did you know, for instance, that the nationally-known orchestra, directed by Benjamin Swalin, plays more programs free to more school children than any other major symphony in the United States?

How they do this is by the support of local chapters of the North Carolina Symphony Society, and by aid from the State of North Carolina (annual appropriation of $20,000).

Children in this area will hear a concert by the Symphony in the Morehead City High School at 2 p.m. tomorrow. The program for them comes as a climax after classroom study—getting ready for the North Carolina Symphony by study of composers, their works, instruments, and through other study plans supplied to teachers throughout the state.

Pogo's advice to local citizenry: "Highly tail it to hear the orchestra Wednesday night. Good music's 'fever' body," Pogo says. And it is.

Azalea Gardens Burst into Blooms

Flowers are now opening rapidly and Charleston Gardens are reported to be up to their usual standard of perfection. Peak bloom, expected to begin the latter part of this month, should be one of the best. The effects of the unprecedented and unpredicted cold snap which nipped early azalea blossoms at Charleston's Famous Gardens have now passed off, according to C. Norwood Hastie Jr., owner of Magnolia Gardens.

Already visitors are swarming in to Charleston to visit the Gardens and Historic Houses. The Stately old homes will be open from March 14 through April 9.

An 18-Year-Old Girl Keeps Snake as Pet

Dayton, Ohio (AP)—Mary Lou Hull, has a pet blacksnake named George. She says she would rather have the 5-foot George wrap himself around her arms than hold a kitten or a puppy. Mary Lou has been interested in reptiles since she was old enough to hold a garter snake. A clerk-typist by day, Mary Lou studies herpetology in her spare time.

Her father, James T. Hull, says, "The whole family is enthusiastic about George." Her mother, a little less enthusiastically, says she tolerates George around the house but "draws the line" at pet alligators.
