Report Cards Go Out Monday; Six Weeks Remain This Term

Special Note—Report cards go out Monday morning. This grading period coming up is the next to final grading period and all parents should study more carefully than usual reports of failure at this time. There remain only six weeks of school which mean that any child failing now has only a few more weeks for radical improvement. Should there continue to be failing work done, the likelihood is that there will be a repeating of the grade.

"Project" seems to be the byword in many of the classes. The most unique seem to be those done in the science classes where guinea pigs are being used for a nutrition experiment, where natural habitats are being built for other animals, and where almost collegiate types of work are being done in the cause of science by all the students. Since the science projects are so interesting, there will be more details later when more of the projects are nearing an end.

Geometry students are equally busy in the project field. They are creating pictures and booklets in which they show their own originality and ingenuity with geometric design.

The seniors are completing research themes which they began last month. This theme has been used for the development of skills in three lines: for note taking, for outlining, and for the combining of research information with native literary ability to produce factual and informative work.

There are six weeks of school left, which means a mass tying of loose ends on the part of both student and teacher. Projects of all kinds must be completed, book reports must be turned in, extra material must be sifted for value content, and of course, there is always those who try for last-minute cramming to keep from failing.

One of the aforementioned projects is being done in Miss Chadwick's Latin class. The students are out to prove that Latin is not a dead language. Illustrating this theory, every available resource is being used.

Some students have given oral reports, others have made booklets and still others have made use of the school's audio-visual equipment by showing pictures related to their topics. All material used has been gained from research. A small side project for these Latin students is the making of lists of Latin-stemmed words found in daily reading or heard in conversation.

Still hard at work is the entertainment committee for the Junior-Senior banquet. Virginia Hassell is chairman of this committee and with the very talented assistance and advice of Mrs. Anne Salter, the program is going to be a tremendous production. In fact the entire banquet is quite a production, as every working junior will confess.

The following girls have been selected to serve as patrol officers on the basis of their responsibility and dependability: Sue Dixon, Deanna Gaskill, Geroline Lawrence, Roberta Willis, Paula Hill, Marilyn Merrill, Annie Taylor, Betty Bryant, Gertrude Powell, Sara Roarty, Alberta Springle, and Francis Willis.

An industrious group of Beaufort High juniors went to Faye Mason's home Monday night to clip together the memory books for the Junior-Senior banquet. Bruce Edwards was kept busy during the evening working on place cards.

Later in the evening Faye served soft drinks, cookies and candy. Since it was Ada Lewis's birthday, the affair served as party too. Those present were Jessie Dixon, Ada Lewis, Gehrman Holland, Herbert Mason, Henry Safrin, Sammy Magill, Bruce Edwards, Virginia Davis, Virginia Hassell, Martha Gibbs, Hugh Mason, Bobby Guthrie, Wayne Whitehurst, Ann Hill, Patty Jean Lewis, and Janice Murphy.

All who attended had a fine time, so congrats, juniors, for getting the memory books ready for the Junior-Senior Banquet.

Mrs. Jenny Farrior's sixth grade presented a chapel program Wednesday, April 14.

Harriet Hill read the 100th Psalm, Joe Powell read an Easter story, "When Jesus, the Crucified Saviour, Arose from the Dead." Evenette Hancock led in prayer.

The class sang, "Our School is Marching On," to the tune of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Kay Temple, Regina Pake, Callie Hunnings, Annette Taylor, and Linda Hardesty presented a flag drill.

A play entitled, "The Books Speak," was the highlight of the program. The setting was in the schoolroom on Friday afternoon. The children had gone home for the weekend. The books had crawled to the floor and were discussing their problems.

The speaking characters were Fred Boswell, Arithmetic; Wiley Lewis Jr., Reader; Theresa Bellamah, Language; Nancy Atkinson, Geography; John Herbener, Speller; George Huntley III, Health; Calvin Jones, History; and Shelia Willis, Dictionary.

George Huntley III gave a piano solo, "Theme from Liebestraum," by Liszt. Jerry Fulford announced the program. Miss Pivers' first grade gave the following program for assembly, Tuesday, April 6:

Mickey Bertram read the 23rd Psalm and sang, "Father We Thank Thee," followed by a play entitled, "The Princess Who Lost Her Smile."

Characters were Sarah Phillips, Princess; Anne Beeton, Queen; Bertie Eubanks, Clara Safrin, and Virginia Day, Ladies-in-waiting; Linda Fulcher, Soloist; Linda Peterson, Dancer; Tommy Rollison, Jack-in-the-box; and Rodney Goodwin, man in charge of dolls.

Dolls were Gwendolyn Hardy, Mary Warham, Glenda Taylor, Linda Cayton, Linda Long, Evelyn Willis, Joyce Buck, Gloria Womac, Sharon Modlin, and Elizabeth Potter.
