

ANTHONY EDEN

SCHOOL BOY. Eden was born at Windlestone Hall, Durham, June 12, 1897, the son of Sir William Eden, a typical country gentleman. He attended famed Eton.

IN WORLD WAR I he obtained commission as second lieutenant at 17. He spent two years in trenches, rose to rank of captain, won Military Cross for bravery.

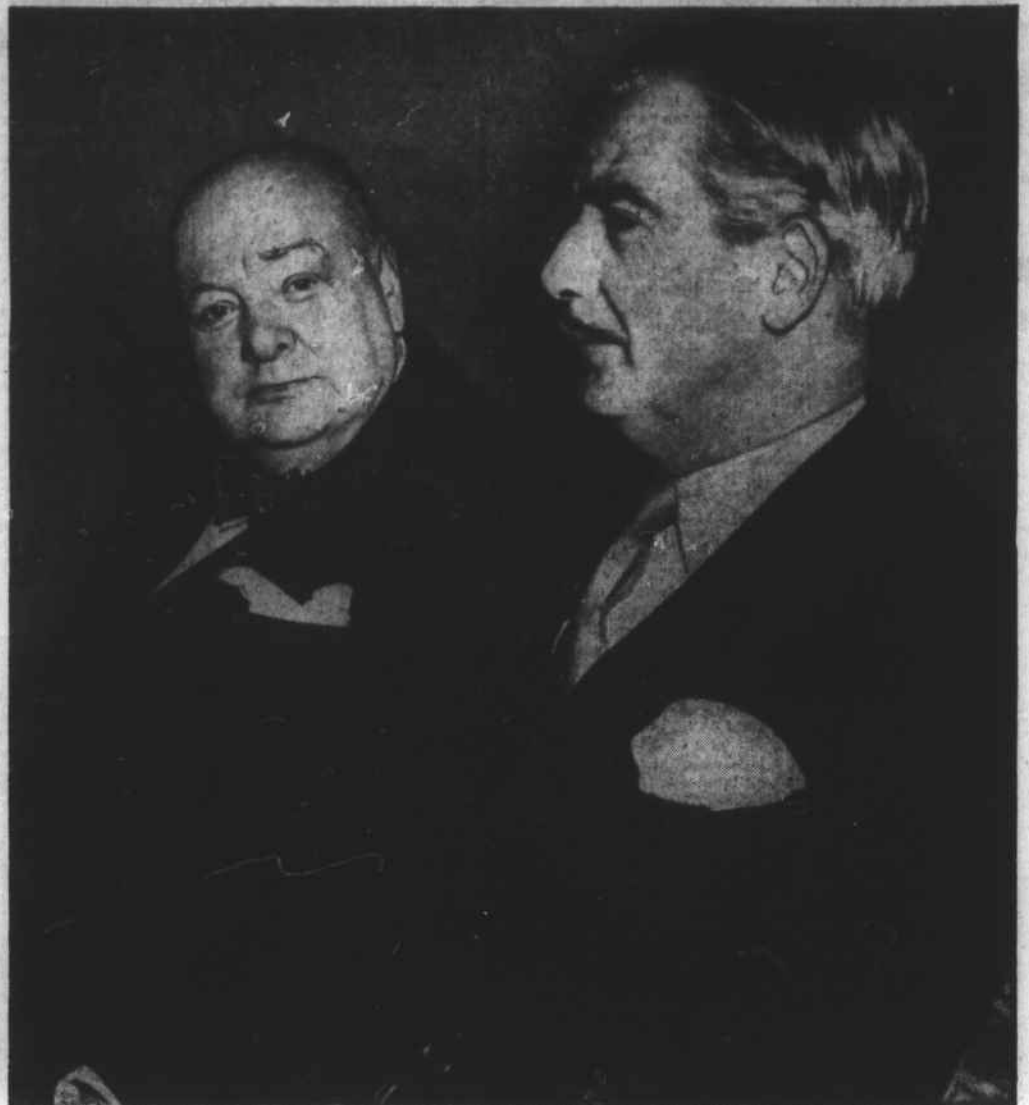

PARLIAMENTARIAN. Following the war he went to Oxford, graduated with honors in Oriental languages. Elected to Parliament, he became a crack debater.

WITH FIRST WIFE. In 1923, he married Beatrice Helen Beckett, daughter of Sir Gervase Beckett. They were divorced in 1950. They had two sons, Simon and Nicholas.

WITH SECOND WIFE. In 1952, Eden, then 55, married Clarissa Churchill, 32, niece of the Prime Minister. She worked as clerk in Britain's wartime Foreign Office.

EDEN AND CHURCHILL, always a close, hard-working team, with similar aims and objectives. "We thought alike even without consultation," Churchill has said of their collaboration.

AT NO. 10 DOWNING STREET. With jaunty step, the immaculately-dressed but hatless Eden approaches the prime minister's residence, after a walk from his nearby Foreign Office. He has taken this short trip innumerable times.

MAN OF MANY PARTS

WELL-DRESSED DIPLOMAT. Eden has always been the popular conception of the perfect drawing room figure, whether he donned uniform, left, or sported homburg as with Neville Chamberlain, center, or receiving honorary degree, right.

WELL TRAVELED. Hardly a month passes that Eden has not been off somewhere on a diplomatic mission, tightening Britain's ties with her dominions and allies or healing some threatened breach with others. A symbol of his deep friendship for the U.S. was this happy meeting with Eisenhower in 1952.
