Cinemascope Shows Female Stars at Their Loveliest

Cinemascope, the new photographic process, which is revolutionizing the production of motion pictures today, also is having its effect on the lives of Hollywood actresses. Now the cinema glamour girls can throw away their diet books, according to Jean Negulesco who directed "How To Marry A Millionaire."

"Conventional flat screen photography added anything from a pound or so to 10 pounds to the actress, depending upon a number of variables such as bone structure," the director explained. "The result was that some stars actually dieted themselves underweight in order to appear at their most attractive weight on the screen."

"But the new Cinemascope process, with its concave screen and three dimensional illusion, permits an actress to appear at what is really her best weight without having to allow for a fattening camera lens."

Dieting is not a thing of the past in Hollywood, Negulesco averred, but the new lenses provide relief.

"This is all a very good thing, too. Excessive dieting tends sometimes to decrease the amount of expression in a face and develops vertical lines which can end a career."

Negulesco can comment with authority, since the stars of "How To Marry a Millionaire" are three of Hollywood's top glamour girls, Marilyn Monroe, Betty Grable and Lauren Bacall.

"I don't know whether diet had anything to do with the way they looked when they came on the set," he laughed diplomatically, "but I do know I would have shot anyone who tried to interfere in any way with their distribution of poundage."

Wilmington Station Conducts Contest

Television station WMFD-TV, Wilmington, is conducting a contest for the title "Miss TV of the Coastal Carolinas." The winner of the contest will appear on WMFD-TV and will have a week's vacation with all expenses paid at one of the four major beaches of North Carolina.

To enter the contest any girl between the ages of 18 and 25 must send a recent photo of herself to WMFD-TV before July 15. Contestants must be single and live within the viewing range of WMFD-TV.

Judges will select five girls from the entrants and those five girls will appear on the "Miss TV of the Coastal Carolinas" program on July 22 at 9:15 a.m. The final selection will be based on write-in votes and the winner will be announced on "TV Song Shop" Sunday evening, Aug. 1.
