Helen Whitehurst, both of Morehead City, and Mrs. Edna Davis of Davis. Mrs. Nellie Fulcher of Morehead City is the cook. She presides in a large spic and span kitchen.
The nurses work in eight-hour shifts and have two days off a week. Mrs. DeGaetano fills in on the fourth eight-hour daily shift.
The DeGaetanos rent the home. Mrs. DeGaetano has a dream of some day building their own home "the way we'd like it." During the two years prior to their coming here, the DeGaetanos operated a convalescent home in California.
They accept any type patient, even mental patients, as long as they are not violent. The rates for guests are set by the operators of the home.
Old folks, Mrs. DeGaetano said, are not the easiest persons to handle. "Sometimes you have to talk to them just as you would to children and must frequently be quite firm with them. But we have our pleasant and even funny moments."
The Bogue Sound Rest Home is in a beautiful location and the setting in itself is enough to give any older or convalescent a new and happy outlook on life.

Mrs. DeGaetano lights a cigarette for C. E. Mason, Morehead City, who recently celebrated his 69th birthday. In the bed in the background is Joseph Lockey, 73, of Morehead City.

Gamma globulin, for the prevention of paralytic polio, measles and infectious hepatitis, will be available on doctors' prescriptions through regular medical supply channels after Oct. 1, 1954, it was announced today by Lederle Laboratories Division, American Cyanamid Company.
Heretofore the protective blood fraction has been allocated by the Federal Office of Defense Mobilization to local departments of health for use in polio epidemic areas only. The processed supply of gamma globulin available to physicians this year, though still very small, is approximately twice as large as last year's supply.
In a report to physicians sent out this summer, Dr. Kenneth S. Landauer, assistant medical director, National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, points out that "gamma globulin is the only proved weapon now available to physicians for prophylaxis against paralytic poliomyelitis."
"The basic scientific evidence established in 1951 and 1952 field trials that gamma globulin can prevent paralytic polio has recently been not only reaffirmed but strengthened, so that its usefulness seems even greater than we formerly believed," states Dr. Landauer.
Failure to understand the limitations of gamma globulin accounted for public confusion during the summer of 1953, when it was made available as a public health measure, says Dr. Landauer. "As a result of the mode of distribution, the 1953 use of gamma globulin for mass or group prophylaxis against poliomyelitis was only in rare instances correctly timed for maximum effectiveness," Dr. Landauer writes.
"In many communities it was not given until after the peak of a poliomyelitis epidemic had already passed. Adverse reports on its use were therefore scientifically meaningless. Data collected in the 1951-52 control studies still stand as valid, reliable and undisputed."
While the use of gamma globulin in polio is comparatively new, the agent has a long history of usefulness against measles — in offering temporary immunity and in reducing the severity of an attack of the disease. The lifting of restrictions on the sale of gamma globulin this year will make it much more available for measles.
Since gamma globulin is extracted from human blood, the supply will always be limited. Lederle processes gamma globulin through arrangements made with large hospitals throughout the East. No donated blood from the Red Cross or other agencies is used by Lederle.

Not to be confused with the polio vaccine now undergoing trial in this country, gamma globulin may perhaps be described as a grab bag of temporary immunity. It is that part of human blood which prevents an individual from catching some infectious diseases twice. It carries the antibodies developed to combat a disease during illness. Even a light case of infectious hepatitis will produce antibodies.
Most Have Protection
Most adults have antibodies against polio and measles in the gamma globulin of their blood because they have had light cases of these diseases, some perhaps without knowing it. When the gamma globulin from a thousand or more different individuals is pooled together, the pool is certain to contain antibodies against polio, measles and infectious hepatitis.
Collection and distribution of gamma globulin is an organized way for the immune to lend their immunity to individuals who have no antibodies of their own. As long as the borrowed antibodies remain in the blood, they will prevent or reduce the severity of an attack of the disease against which they were originally manufactured. But after five to eight weeks, the borrowed antibodies pass out of the blood.
The main use of gamma globulin then, is to safeguard against an epidemic or a threatened exposure in the immediate future.
