

Religion and the Press

AN EDITORIAL

Sunday is the third day of National Newspaper Week. Specifically, it is "Religion and the Press Day."

Historically and in a very real sense, the press and the pulpit are partners. There are times when the two seem far apart, but in a deeper sense they are not.

It is factual reporting to say that churches and newspapers rise and fall together. In every land bent under a tyrant's yoke, two things stand out: (1) a controlled press and (2) an intimidated church.

You may put it down for a truism that there cannot long be a free church in a nation which has a slave press. By the same token, a free press will not endure alongside an imprisoned church.

The two thus are dependent on each other and complementary to each other. The press maintains freedom of the mind and the church preserves freedom of the spirit. Both are necessary. Take one away and the other is sorely distressed.

It is significant that Article 1 of the Bill of Rights recognizes this church-press partnership by providing specifically that Congress shall make no law (1) respecting the establishment of religion and (2) abridging freedom of press or speech. A third prohibition forbids any abridgement of the right to assemble peaceably.

It is significant that the founders of our country placed these two guarantees of press freedom and religious freedom together, back to back.

As newspapers of this nation observe their "week" and dedicate themselves to the cherished task of keeping the people informed, they salute the churches of the land for their transcendent responsibility of keeping people faithful to their religious inclinations.

No informed and faithful nation is likely to ever fall prey to false doctrine, or false god.

There is Close Inter-Relationship Between Religious, Press Freedom

By BURKE WALSH

This is an excellent time to consider the inter-relationship existing between the freedom of the press and the freedom of religion. They are among our fundamental freedoms, and one can be used to sustain the other to lasting benefit of both.

The freedom of religion is really the most fundamental of all the freedoms. Not only does it enable man to achieve his ultimate and greatest goal, but without the freedom of religion the other freedoms cannot exist, or are perverted to the uses of the persecutor of religion.

Two Separate Things

Freedom of religion is not to be confused with freedom of conscience. Freedom of conscience is the freedom to think what one pleases along religious lines. No other media of religious instruction can grant this right or control its exercise. There is much talk about "thought control," but actually you cannot control thought.

A person can be forbidden to think about religion, or to think about a religion in a certain way, but how can you ever prevent him from violating the edict? How would you know when he was violating it?

No, freedom of religion means not only the right to think about religion, the religion of your choice, but the right to practice it. It means the right to live your religion, in your church, your home, in your office. It means the right to propagate the religion of your choice through maintenance of churches, schools, missions and

This is one manifestation of the freedom of expression. The freedom of the press is another.

It is Essential

The freedom of the press is essential to our every day life. It gives man necessary knowledge about things temporal, just as the church instructs him in things spiritual. It is easy to see how a tyrant who would want to keep people "in the dark" regarding temporal affairs of their country would want to keep them ignorant of things spiritual, too.

Freedom of expression should not be carried to extremes. Then it becomes license. Freedom of expression should not be used to abuse, defame or slander an individual or a group. It should not be utilized

Sisters Teach Students History Through Songs

Sister William Patrice with some of her students.

Detroit (AP) — Sister William Patrice keeps her students in tune with the times. She does it with a history book and a pitch pipe. Sister Patrice finds her students at Visitation School more easily can recall a period of history if a song flits through their minds.

For example, during the study of Columbus' arrival in the New World, the class learns that the explorer's crew upon sighting land sang a jubilant, "Te Deum." The class sings "Te Deum Laudamus" (Holy God We Praise Thy Name).

Then moving into the study of the Civil War period, the students learn of slaves. They sing a Negro spiritual, "They Identify World War I" with "Over There," and World War II by "Coming In On A Wing and A Prayer."

The theory of teaching history with music was the idea of Sister Mary Francella, a compatriot of Sister Patrice in the Dominican order. She tested the theory at Visitation School.

Now youngsters in all parochial schools in the archdiocese of Detroit are learning their American history by singing.

School Drafts Parents To Help in Driving Course

By EDWARD S. KITCH

Oak Park, Ill. — If Oak Park parents want their kids to learn to drive, they have to sign up too.

School officials say this is the only place in the United States where they are approaching parents with a contract.

Before a teen-ager can enroll in high school driver training course, dad has to sign a contract agreeing to give the student at least eight hours of actual on-the-street practice in the family car.

"The success of the course, says instructor Ray C. Soliday, "is in keeping the parents interested."

To find out just what and how their kids are learning, parents come to school for three evenings during the semester to see tests and instruction.

This is what happens during the classes held twice a week for 18 weeks at Oak Park, one of the first high schools in the country to install driver training as a course of study.

Students use Drivotrainers, units built like the front seat of an automobile with steering mechanism, standard shift, clutch and brake pedals connected to an electric recording system.

The instructor is able to read a printed record of the student's responses to a series of driving instructions and traffic violations presented in 12 instructional and test films.

Early in the course the kids must demonstrate a knowledge of traffic laws and regulations, parking restrictions, signs and signals.

Visual tests and reaction time checks are given.

Then state examiners come to the school for the official tests for instructional permits.

Although only in Oak Park do parents and teachers work together in just this way to make safe drivers of youngsters, other places are aware of the problem.

Of the United States' 24,000 high schools, a little more than 4 out of 10 offer some kind of driver education. Three states — North Dakota, California and Virginia — make such training in school compulsory.

training authority with the Traffic Institute of Northwestern University, says it's possible to cut down, if not out, the number of traffic deaths by training young drivers in high schools.

One of the Institute's surveys shows that high school trained drivers have only one fourth to one-half as many traffic accidents as those without driver education experience.

The driver training program in the state of Washington is credited with reducing the young driver accident rate by 40 per cent last year.

But many schools hesitate to set up the course because equipment is expensive and on-the-road training is costly. Installations like the Oak Park 15-Drivotrainer classroom represent a $20,000 investment.

Dr. Noffsinger says it costs an average of $30 a student to train him to drive on the road. Despite the cost, however, schools offering road practice increased from 200 to 400 this year.

"If having driver education in the United States at a cost of 25 million dollars saves the life of one child, it's worth while," sums up Dr. Noffsinger.

Student Exchange Works Out Well for Two Girls

Long Beach, Calif. (AP) — Esther Beckstead, a student at Wilson High School, and Janine Vertanian, of Paris, France, have exchanged schools. But their switch has produced more than travel and education.

Janine has become engaged to an American surgeon, Dr. Harold Peters of Los Angeles. They'll honeymoon in France.

Her mother reports Esther may marry a lawyer she met in Europe.

Cancer Report

Minneapolis — (AP) — In its first five years of operation, the University of Minnesota cancer detection center discovered 91 cancers in the 5,353 men and women examined. In addition 1,300 lesions considered to be pre-cancerous.
