New Fashion Note Will Put More Money in Fox Breeders' Pockets

Copenhagen — With Paris fashions pointing the way, a favorite fur of a quarter century ago may make a comeback.

In the early 1930s silver fox furs were many women's most prized possession—or dearest wish. But with the changing styles, the silver fox was replaced by mink and Persian lamb. It gradually disappeared from the feminine wardrobe.

Now, however, because of Paris' nod, Danish fur breeders are already working to speed up the breeding of silver foxes.

Denmark's cold weather, dampness and wind make the fox produce a thick woolen coat protected by long top hairs, the more silvery the better. The farmers of Denmark's 70 silver fox farms are now able to breed them with so much silver that they almost look a light pearl gray.

A farm not far from Copenhagen is experimenting with silver foxes. The foxes are kept in small wire-cages well off the ground. Each cage contains only one fox, to prevent fighting.

Each fox gives birth to about three to five cubs in the spring. These cubs only live one summer and are killed in the autumn when their pelts are at their finest.

The foxes are fed on fish, meat and potatoes to which are added vitamins.

The animals are scientifically controlled from the day they are born till the day they are killed to be made into a cape, stole or some other garment.

When the silver fox was last in fashion about 25 years ago the whole animal was worn — one or two at a time — with head, legs and tail, or made up into bulky coats.

This autumn silver fox fashions are quite different. Paris is already showing small detachable collars, which can be worn on a suit or coat as a small cape. To make the furs lighter, the skins are cut into strips and lengths of material inserted.

The Allis-Chalmers CA Tractor at full-rated horsepower has an engine speed of 1650 rpm. and a PTO speed of 538 rpm. . . . ideal power and speed for combine work.

What does this mean to you at harvest time? Full engine power is available at the standard PTO speed of 538 rpm. Combine speed is held more constant for properly coordinated work . . . cutting, feeding, shelling, separating, and cleaning. Crop losses are reduced.
