Farmers Turn To Aromatic Leaf

A number of North Carolina farmers are learning that they can produce a high-quality aromatic (Turkish) tobacco without years of experience, according to R. H. Crouse, extension tobacco specialist.

M. W. Anderson of route 6 Lexington, and S. B. Severs of route 1 Linwood, became the first Davidson County farmers to produce aromatic tobacco this year.

They were able to produce a high quality product without previous experience in growing aromatic tobacco. Neither had ever seen a crop of this type before producing their own crops.

Vaude Hartsell of route 2 Stanfield, in Stanly County produced his first crop of aromatic tobacco in 1950. Since that year he has increased his acreage as well as quality, although all of his crops have been of very good quality. He started with less than one-half acre and produced over 2 1/2 acres this year.

Mr. Hartsell was able to increase his acreage by adopting improved labor-saving methods of harvesting and by installing a curing system recommended by State College.

On his first sale this year, he sold 1,528 pounds of tobacco at an average of 97 cents per pound.

Mr. Crouse said that all three farmers are of the opinion that many more farmers in this state will be giving aromatic tobacco more serious consideration as another cash crop to fit into their farming operations.

During the Roman occupation of Britain early in the Christian era, the legions set up three permanent bases for control of the country.
