Trial

operates a service station at Havelock.

Prior to the shooting, Mrs. Mattingly told officer Haught that her husband had choked and slapped her.

Following testimony of the foregoing witnesses, the state rested and Claud Wheatly Jr., attorney for Mrs. Mattingly, called Sgt. Ellis Goodson to the stand. Goodson testified that on the afternoon of Sept. 15, at about 5 p. m. he went to Smitty's, a beer place about a quarter of a mile from the Mattingly's.

He said that Mattingly was there drinking. Goodson said he had two beers with him and then he bought Mattingly a third and left. He testified that Mattingly was not sober.

Mrs. Mattingly, thin, wearing a gray suit, and clenching a handkerchief in her hand, followed Goodson to the stand. She said she was 33, born at Pine Level near Smithfield. She came to Havelock to live with the Ketchers, then married Thomas Sammons by whom she had a son, Thomas.

Her husband and his brother, Van Sammons, had a small farm near Havelock. On Jan. 6, 1956, she said her husband died in the car while she was bringing him back from New Bern where he was taking treatment for cirrhosis of the liver.

On May 15, 1957 she married Mattingly, who she said, was a good husband when sober but mean when drunk. On June 15, 1958 her second child, by Mattingly, was born. She said that when she was five and a half months pregnant, Mattingly threatened her with a gun and to escape, she had to go out a second story window, on to a porch roof and then to the ground.

She said that because Mattingly and her former husband's brother, Van Sammons, couldn't get along, the Mattingly's moved to Newport the end of June. The Sammons had been living on the first floor of a house at Havelock and the Mattingly's on the second.

On the weekend of the shooting, Mrs. Mattingly said that they were planning to go to Pine Level, but her husband drank Saturday and Sunday and on Monday the money ran out.

She said she went to Trader's store at Havelock and got a $10 check cashed, but asked that the store hold the check for several days. At 2 p. m. the afternoon of the 15th, her husband came in and took $2 to get more beer and told her to have supper ready when he got back.

He came back later and supper wasn't ready, so he took the remaining $8 and went back to Smitty's. When he returned, she said she and her son had eaten supper and were watching tv. She said that he came storming in, sent her son to bed, cursed her and got a gun from the kitchen closet.

She said he slapped her and tried to choke her, then loaded the gun with two bullets, saying that if he came back and found the sheriff there, one bullet was for him and the other for her.

(On several previous occasions, the sheriff had been called when Mattingly had been involved in disturbances at Havelock.)

Mrs. Mattingly said that her husband then left, saying that he was going for more beer so that he'd have enough nerve to kill her when he got back.

When he came back, he left the gun in the car but brought two shells into the house. Then he told her to go to the car to get the gun and showed her how to load it. He laid on the bed, she said, and she put the loaded gun inside the bedroom door.

He said, "You kill me," the witness testified, but just then the baby cried. While she was taking care of the baby, she heard the bed springs squeak and thinking he was getting up to get the gun to shoot her, she grabbed the gun as he sat up and shot him.

Under cross-examination, solicitor Robert Rouse Jr. asked how she knew her husband was getting up to shoot her. He also asked her to take the gun and show how she held it when she shot her husband, but she merely held the gun in her lap.

Witnesses testifying on behalf of Mrs. Mattingly and describing her husband as a dangerous man when drunk were J. B. Lockhart, Joseph A. Mattingly, the dead man's brother from Louisville, Ky., Van Sammons, Sterling L. Ketcher, deputy sheriff Bruce Edwards of Craven County, Roger Corder and Harry Bell.

Waddell

of Nov. 6 there was approximately $1,011 in cash in it. This was missing, as well as some silver dollars that he had been saving for his youngsters. The silver dollars were in a drawer.

Mr. Huntley said a blue-painted pigging bar, shown him by Mr. Rouse, was the same type that his store stocked.

Sheriff Salter described the scene of the robbery as he found it. He said that the facing was ripped off the middle part of a door to the store. A hole, about 16 inches square was ripped out of the back of the safe. He identified pictures that had been taken of the damaged safe, also a piece of metal that he had ordered cut from around the hole.

That metal, an six found beside the safe, and insulation that had been pulled from the safe, he mailed to the State Bureau of Investigation at Raleigh.

John Edwards, special agent with the SBI, later testified that he sent these items to the FBI in Washington, D. C.

H. L. Cox, Elizabeth City police officer, followed the sheriff on the stand. On the night of Nov. 10, he stopped, in Elizabeth City, a car being driven by Adams. With Adams were Waddell and Mears.

Adams told him the car (identified by Cox as a '51 Mercury) belonged to Bobby Waddell, but he had no registration for it. Cox charged him with improper registration.

He said he recognized Mears as an escapee from state prison. The three told him that they were on their way to Cherry Point to work as carpenters on a construction job. He said they had no suitcases with them, but showed him tools in the trunk of their car.

He said he took all three of them to the police station. Then he took from the trunk a tray of carpenter's tools, a cro-bar, ax, Boy Scout hatchet, lug wrench, and a crate opener. He identified these items as presented to him by the solicitor, as well as three pairs of dark-colored cotton work gloves which he said he found under the front seat of the car. Also found with the gloves was a punch.

In a conversation with the three at the station, Cox said they told him who owned what tools, but none claimed to know anything about the crate opener.

Mr. Edwards, SBI agent, whose testimony followed Cox's, corroborated the policeman's testimony and identified items in the car that he sent to the FBI.

Reginald Adams, employee at Huntley's, testified that a box of used tools that had been near the cracked safe, could not be found after the robbery.

Mr. Jevons, special FBI agent, assigned to the FBI laboratory as a mineralogist, testified that on Nov. 17 he received a package containing an ax, cro-bar, crate opener, safe insulation and dark-colored fabric gloves.

He said that he found on all of them deposits of safe insulation material, of the type used in safes to make them fire-resistant. The defense attorneys tried to establish that such insulation might also be used as a building material, but weren't very successful.

Mr. Jevons stated that particles of the safe insulation still remained on the tools and they were passed by the solicitor to the jury (the jury had to make no decision on the case when Waddell pleaded guilty).

Mr. Zimmer of the FBI laboratory testified that he made a study of the tools found in the Adams-Waddell car and compared them with marks on the metal from the safe. By making test impressions with the tools and, following microscopic examination, he said he was able to determine that the cro-bar found in the car was the same one used on the safe.

The ax found by the safe was similarly identified.

It was following his testimony that Waddell's attorney entered the guilty plea. Both Waddell and Adams sat impassively throughout the trial. Waddell chewed the fingers on his tattooed left hand frequently. He and Adams exhibited extreme interest while the FBI agents were testifying.

Both youths were long hair-dos with sideburns and carefully groomed dock-tail. Waddell's face flushed after he was sentenced, then officers accompanied him from the courtroom.

Sheriff Salter said yesterday that officers had not yet learned how Waddell and his buddies disposed of the money taken from Huntley's.
