Gerald Woolard, fire chief and civil defense director, told the board that Beaufort and Carteret county are designated as a target area by the state civil defense. He read a request from the state civil defense director asking the town to set up a survival plan.

Mr. Woolard also requested that the town civil defense program be stepped up by turning over the use of the fire department building and a personnel vehicle that the town owns. Maps showing escape routes will be put on the walls of the fire department building, he said.

The board acted favorably on his request.

Also meeting with the board were George and Bill Freeman, who represent a High Point firm who have been under contract with the town for over three years to devise a plan for handling sewage.

George Freeman was informed of a court order requiring the town to provide sewage lines to annexed areas.

After being told of these developments by the mayor, George Freeman said: "You aren't creating anything new we haven't already planned to cope with."

Concerning annexation, town attorney Claud Wheatly said a few residents in the prescribed areas to be annexed have appealed and until litigation is ended, no action can be taken.

board out of all the discussion was a resolution delegating Mayor Potter to complete and file a petition for a federal loan for advanced planning. To file this petition, Mr. Potter said he will go to Atlanta, Ga.

Mayor Potter said that while he was in Atlanta, he would determine just what the town can do about urban renewal.

Hearing

new regulations, but as in septic tank regulations put into effect five years ago, no one today questions them and a tremendous sanitation problem has been solved.

Former assemblyman D. G. Bell, who attended part of the hearing, said he was instrumental in having the subdivision enabling act passed in 1959. People, he said, are moving to rural areas and "you have to give some thought to their comfort and safety." He said the law was made to benefit the people as a whole and not a few individuals.

Luther Hamilton Jr., county attorney, asked Jerry Turner, with the division of community planning (C&D), who helped draft the regulations, what could prevent a man from ignoring the regulations.

Mr. Turner said that policing of the subdivision situation lies with the register of deeds who would be able to determine, in recording deeds, whether a landowner is selling lots without first having his plat approved.

Mr. Hassell raised the question of cost. Upon final approval of the plat, the subdivider, regulations say, shall pay $5 or 50 cents per lot, whichever is greater, to the county. It was pointed out that anyone subdividing land usually has a surveyor draw a map anyway, and requirement of such a map by subdivision regulations would not constitute an added cost.

Mr. Bell said that subdivision regulations should have been in effect here 20 years ago. "If you don't have some planning, you'll have no future," he warned. He said there would be some conflicts but added that the people who stand to make money by subdividing are the ones that would have to pay a little bit to comply with the subdivision regulations.

Mr. Hassell said that he has recorded only two maps in the last two years. He predicted that if a property owner doesn't wish to, he won't have maps made or recorded and will sell land merely by defining it by metes and bounds and by issuing a deed.

Mr. Turner claimed that when the register of deeds sees land being transferred in one particular area, that would be an indication that a subdivision is springing up and the subdivider would be notified that he has to comply with a law or be guilty of a misdemeanor.

M. G. Coyle, member of the planning commission said that passing a law that can't be enforced is a waste of time. He said further thought should be given the proposed regulations by both the planning commission and county commissioners.

He suggested another public hearing before final action is taken. Cecil Morris, planning commission member, said that all who worked on the regulations had the interest of the county at heart. He expressed the hope that what has been done would not be wasted but would be a step forward.

County commissioners at the hearing were David Yeomans, C.

CP&L Prepares For Big Blows

Carolina Power & Light Co. is adding new muscle to its "tom walker" micro-wave towers in eastern North Carolina in preparation for the approaching hurricane season.

Men are working at dizzy heights, as much as 300 feet up, to secure new and stronger guys, anchors and other supports for the towers.

Micro-wave, a vital part of the company's two-state communications system, relays radio-telephone messages from the company's central dispatching station in Raleigh to line and service crews in the field.

A 300-foot tower at the company's Louis V. Sutton generating plant near Wilmington has already been equipped with heavier concrete anchors to hold it steady in the face of strong winds. Work began Monday at a 290-foot tower at Wallace.

Other towers at Clinton and Erwin will be similarly strengthened to bring them up to strength of newer towers spotted throughout the company's service area.
