USCG Gives Information On Identification Cards

Voters in Three Townships Will Cast Ballots

Persons wishing to obtain identification cards to enable them to enter the Morehead City port area, should it be closed under Coast Guard security regulations, may apply at the Coast Guard recruiting office at Morehead City post office.

Lt. Gabriel Pehaim, USCG, commanding officer, Fort Macon group, emphasizes that the port is not closed, but all persons having business at the port should keep their CG security ID cards up to date. If the card has expired, they must go through the complete procedure to get a new one.

The ports authority itself has undertaken certain measures to keep unauthorized persons out of the area, but anyone who has business at the SPA office or in the port area may enter.

This includes, according to Walter Friederichs, port manager, persons with federal agency identification, Merchant Mariner documents, Coast Guard port security card, and servicemen.

Precautionary measures were taken last week when the United States ordered Russia to get its missiles out of Cuba and heavy military movement started through the port.

In three townships voters will ballot for constable Tuesday, and in one of the townships, Morehead, voters will also ballot on justices of the peace.

In all instances, one vote will put each candidate in office, unless there is a concentrated campaign to elect someone by write-in ballot.

Justice of the peace candidates in Morehead township are C. M. Krouse, Douglas Jones Odom and C. Elmer Smith.

Mr. Smith, however, who is ill, is confined to a rest home and it is extremely doubtful if he will be able to serve, according to Charles Willis, chairman of the county elections board. The ballots had been printed before Mr. Smith became ill.

Because of the size of Morehead City, three are entitled to serve. When voters see more than one name on the ballot, they may think they are to vote only for one. But one vote for each is permissible. The ballot provides space for write-in votes by Republicans.

Appearing on the same ballot is the name of Buck Newsome for Morehead township constable. Mr. Newsome, a member of the Morehead City police force, is running without opposition.

The only candidate on the Beaufort township ballot is Ronald Edward Smith, running for constable on the Democratic ticket. The only candidate on the Harlowe township ballot is Joseph S. Morton, running for constable on the Democratic ticket.
