Quick Action Saves Man's Life at Port

- Negro Man Remains In Critical Condition
- Doctor, Longshoremen Credited with Rescue

Quick action by longshoremen and a doctor aboard a Naval ship at Morehead City state port averted a tragedy about 2:15 p.m. Wednesday at the port.

Charles McNeill, assistant operations manager at the port, said employees of Heide and Company were loading the freighter, Hasselburg. Among the workers was Harrison Harkley, about 50, Harlowe, a longshoreman.

Harkley, a Negro, suffered an attack of some kind and fell off the dock. He landed in about 40 feet of water between the stern of the ship and the dock, going beneath the water immediately.

Mr. McNeill obtained a grappling hook and line from the Naval ship, one of several in port, requested that they send a doctor, and notified the Coast Guard.

Before the arrival of the doctor or the Coast Guard boats, the men made a pass with the grappling hook. On the first try Vernon Guthrie snagged the leg of Harkley's trousers and hauled him to the surface. A young German seaman from the Hasselburg and the longshoremen put a line around Harkley, hoisted him to the dock, and moved him to a transit shed.

The Navy doctor, W. A. Halligan, quickly gave the man mouth to mouth respiration. McNeill said Harkley was not breathing when pulled from the water. Dr. Halligan continued the respiration until Harkley recovered his breath, then other corpsmen from the ship assisted the doctor with an air tube. Dr. Wilson, state health department officer doing some work at the port, came to the scene and offered his assistance. An ambulance was called and Harkley was taken to Morehead City hospital. McNeill said Harkley must have been under water between seven and ten minutes. Harkley remained confined to Morehead City hospital yesterday, where his condition was described as critical.

Essay by Student Delegate Tells What Country Means

The following essay, written by Miss Carrie Lee Dickinson, was judged best in a contest sponsored by Miriam Rebekah lodge, Beaufort, recently. The contest was held to select a delegate for the United Nations pilgrimage this summer. Miss Dickinson is a student at Beaufort high school.

In this effort to discuss what the United States means to the rest of the world, first I must define what the United States means to the Americans who live here. America means this: opportunity to develop one's ability, and peace and freedom under democratic law. What the United States means to the rest of the world can be defined in two words "The Gift."

A nation cannot buy love, loyalty and respect with money or resources—a nation only buys these commodities with faith and integrity. This is America's "gift." America's goal is world peace! How these words ring out and what deep meaning they have for many people today. Yes, America's wish is for peace, but not peace at any cost. America wishes for no victories but those of peace, for no land except our own, for no power except the power over ourselves. America believes that the independence and equal rights of the smallest and weakest country should have as much respect as those of the greatest empire! All men cry for freedom and each nation defines freedom in its own peculiar jargon of words.

In the years before the twentieth century, the masses of people had been content to let the ones, with power and money at the top, dictate their freedoms. The masses have been reluctant to accept the responsibilities that go with freedom or to contribute to the responsibilities which beget these freedoms; that is, the freedoms that offer the fulfillment of the inherent needs of every man and woman, and the natural freedoms of mind, soul, and body that give men essence to love, something to work toward, a God to worship, and a heaven to look up to. These things always and above all, are under the jurisdiction of the Creator himself. These particular freedoms and these peculiar ideals are the things the United States offers as its "gift" to the rest of the world! Now I will discuss what America's "gift" consists of. Our America has been called "the sleeping giant," but it has never failed to be awakened from the cries of oppression from other countries. America is a superstructure, built by peoples of many countries and many kinds. We offer to all nations who will be our brothers the guiding ideals of our Constitution, fairness and opportunity for all, with basic human rights assured to every one regardless of his origin. Perhaps our "gift" is contained just within the visual boundaries of our great Constitution. Under this constitution, Americans do not
