THE CHICKADEE

There are two varieties of Chickadee in the mountain counties of Western North Carolina, the Black-capped and the Carolina Chickadee.

The crown, nape, and throat of both kinds are black; the sides of the head and neck of each are white; the outer vanes of the greater wing-coverts, also the margins of wings and tail of the Black-capped Chickadee are white (this is almost absent in the Carolina Chickadee). The length of the Black-capped is about five and a quarter inches; the length of the Carolina is about four inches; the breast of each is white.

The Chickadee, the least pugnacious of the birds, feeds in amity among its kind and responds readily to good treatment. Its diet is mainly larvae, chrysalids, moth eggs, snout beetles, and tent-caterpillar moths. It is an acrobat, often cutting capers in the air, clinging to the under side of a twig, etc. Perhaps no other bird utters its own name more clearly than the Chickadee.

Incidentally, the Carolina Chickadee came near being our state-adopted bird. During the session of the Legislature before the last both Senate and House passed a bill making the Chickadee our state bird but at the same session the act was repealed. So North Carolina is one of the very few states without a state-adopted bird.

ROAN MOUNTAIN

North Carolina is spending thousands of dollars advertising the advantages and beauties of this great state, but only a scattered few of its own citizens have seen the most beautiful spots that the Great Creator ever made. The Andes are majestic, but there is no mountain on earth that will compare with the Roan Mountain, particularly from June 25 to July 10th.

Where is this most wonderful mountain? - on the state line between North Carolina and Tennessee, in Mitchell county, N. C. and Carter county, Tenn. Why extra beautiful for this short period? Because there are about 800 acres of the most beautiful rhododendron to be found on the face of the earth. This year they seem to have had an injection of colchicine to produce such a rich color. Thirteen miles away these wonderful plats look like great Persian rugs hanging out to dry. We would make no invidious comparison, but the famous magnolia gardens or the hanging gardens of Babylon pale to insignificance when compared with the rhododendron gardens on Roan Mountain.

This wonderful mountain is beautiful when not adorned with the flowers. It is 6,285 feet above the rolling sea, and yet one can drive an automobile to the top over a good road and when on top there is space for the parking of an unlimited number of cars.

More than fifty years ago General Wilder, a union general in the war between the states, came to see this world's wonder, bought a large part of the mountain and constructed a hotel near the top. The hotel was burned, the General died and the hotel was never rebuilt. A road was built by General Wilder from the Tennessee side of the mountain and very recently a good mountain road has been built up the North Carolina side and these two roads connect in a gap on the mountain. From there to the glorious heights one road serves the public.

When you look on wonderful garden plots and watered by the potent God, you stand in amazement! You seek for adjectives to describe all the adjectives in the dictionary. You say "In conditions of all rain, the streams of water have been outcrops, bridges, ways and railroads. The obstruction of highways and railroads and bus service has been hampered. Power lines and communication lines have also suffered. Old timers say that the streams were the highest that they have been for a quarter of a century.

Another character of this wonderful mountain is, that it is in a chain of the oldest mountains in the world. When the Rockies, the Andes, the Alps and the Himalayas were pebbles on the plain, the Roan, the Grandfather, Mt. Mitchell and the Smokies were hoary with age. It would seem, when you view these mountains that the Great Architect of the Universe with his mighty hand like a sower, made one masterful stroke and dropped the Grandfather, then the Roan and then lifting His hand in one great effort, reached the climax in Mt. Mitchell, 6,684, and wound up with having dropped the bulk of His mortar in 2 pile called the Smokies.

There is no spot on earth that can compare with Roan Mountain when the rhododendron has on her Sunday dress. You may stand on Council Crest in Portland, Ore., and view the snow-capped peaks; sail down the St. Lawrence river through the Thousand Islands; view Miami Beach, in winter with its mass of poinsettia and other beautiful flowers; admire the Grand Canyon of the Colorado; and then having searched the world for beauty, come and see the Roan Mountain and be satisfied.-(Col. E. F. Watson).

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank each and every person for their kindness and sympathy during the illness and death of our wife and mother.-(Willard Smith and family).

NEWS

At three days North Carolina visited by ex-cessive rains and streams of water have been outcrops, bridges, ways and railroads. The obstruction of highways and railroads and bus service has been hampered. Power lines and communication lines have also suffered. Old timers say that the streams were the highest that they have been for a quarter of a century.

The fourth day grew to a close with the twelfth juryman still stubborn as a mule.

"Well, gentlemen," said the court officer, entering the jury room, "shall I, as usual order twelve dinners?"

"Make it," said the foreman, "eleven dinners and a bale of hay."
