BIG CROP LOSS FEARED UNLESS FRUIT IS CANNED

Housewives Urged to Take Advantage of Extra Sugar Ration For Canning

(Atlanta, Ga., June 10.)—OPA officials express fear that a major portion of the $15,000,000 fruit and berry crop in the Southeast will be lost unless housewives take advantage of the extra ration of sugar provided for canning and preserving.

The Office of Price Administration said reports from Georgia, Tennessee and the Carolinas indicated that there was virtually no market for the already ripening fruits and berries in these States.

Housewives seemingly are not aware that they can secure extra sugar for canning purposes, in addition to the sugar allotted to them on their ration cards. Application for this additional supply of sugar for canning and preserving should be made at places designated by local rationing boards.

Housewives, by obtaining extra sugar, will be assuring themselves of a winter supply of sweets in the event of the further tightening of sugar rationing, and at the same time will prevent the waste of the Southeast's present fruit and berry crop, which would result in a heavy loss to Southern growers. Commercial canneries can only use a small percentage of the crops in this region.
