man factory and is turning out repair jobs at the rate of more than 300 a week. Shop trucks, specially built for vehicle repair, are scattered throughout the building. Ordnance carpenters have built work benches, tool racks and grease pits to complete the set up.

The building is divided into sections where specialized and skilled mechanics, welders, blacksmiths, painters, inspectors and clerks work round the clock in regular shifts.

As the vehicles come in for repair they are carefully checked and inspected at a control point by competent inspectors who make up a work order listing all the necessary repairs and route the vehicle to the sections where the job is to be done.

"The Army's transportation system is not suffering one bit from lack of repair or parts," said Captain John W. Campbell 28, of 525 South Ridgewood Avenue, Daytona Beach, Florida, the unit's commanding officer. "So far we have been able to release 95 per cent of the vehicles within 24 hours after they are brought in for repairs."

In order to add to its limited supply of spare parts, equipment from damaged vehicles is utilized in many instances. As an additional function the company maintains its own small arms service and repair section which handles weapons turned in by ordnance recovery units.

SMALL GRAINS REACT TO FERTILIZATIONS

When wheat is seeded following crops that are fertilized light to medium, the yield is increased both by a fertilizer containing nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash at seeding and by a topdressing of nitrogen in the early spring, so reads the latest agronomy information circular prepared by W. H. Rankin, associate agronomist with the Agricultural Experiment Station at State College.

This conclusion is reached from the results of eight experiments conducted on sandy loam, silt loam and clay loam soils on which the cropping system is made up predominately of lightly fertilized crops, Rankin says. The system was made up of corn, cotton, and small grains, or of lespedeza, cowpeas and soybeans removed for hay, he points out.

The entire report, "Small Grains Respond to Fertilization" is based on ten experiments, conducted on fields including a wide range of soil conditions, cropping systems, and fertilizer practices, Rankin says.

Experiments were designed to show the responses in yields that were produced first from the use of fertilizer at seeding, and second, from the use of topdressing of nitrogen in early spring.

Copies of the circular may be obtained by writing to the Agronomy Department, State College, Raleigh, and asking for Agronomy Information Circular, Number 137.

PULPWOOD

Important in Peace as in War!

Few products are playing a more vital role in winning the war than pulpwood. And the South is proud of the fact that about half the nation's supply of this essential war material comes from this area.

Out of war-time developments will come a greatly enlarged field for pulpwood products and the South can look forward to a vast post-war market for this important crop.

Only the best is good enough for our boys, and you can't make the best munitions and supplies from wood that is rotted, charred or excessively cracked and knotty.

Make every axe-stroke count. Cut only wood that is sound and straight.
