ALL WORKSTOCK NEED CLINICAL TREATMENT

More than five out of every six head of farm workstock need some form of treatment to put them in condition to do the heavy farm work of 1946, says Howard Stamey, Extension animal husbandman at State College.

"In the western section of North Carolina, where bots present a real prob-lem, all workstock need treatment for this pest," Stamey explains, "espec-ially if the animals have been on pasture. About 95 per cent of all workstock have some form of internal parasites.

"Thousands of horses need the sharp corners of the teeth removed with a float or rasp so that they can thoroughly chew their food.

"Feet of workstock need to be properly trimmed be-cause neglect on this point often causes troubles that cannot be corrected."

As a result of this great need for putting workstock in the proper condition for work next year, 67 coun-ties in North Carolina have already made plans for horse and mule clinics to be conducted by the Extension Service during January and February. Free examina-tions will be given by a licensed veterinarian. Stand-ard fees for treatments will be charged throughout the State.

Where clinics have not been planned, farmers should organize community groups and request this service through their county agent.

BURNSVILLE— "So They Say"

About town: Christmas Day was a quiet one here, with many members of fam-ilies home. However, many who had planned to come didn't make it because of the hazardous travel condi-tions. . . It was a compar-atively "White Christmas", but the snow was not the fresh, soft kind which that description brings to mind. Instead, it had lain a little too long, and early Tuesday morning sleet and freezing rain glazed it over. The sun began to shine Wednes- day and now most of the snow and ice has disappeared from the highways and we're all hoping for a few more days of good weather. We've often wondered how the professor feels who sees the good black oil come gushing in from a new well, but somehow, we can't think that, for the moment at least, he can feel much prouder than we do when the fresh pure water comes gushing from our faucets when there has been a dis-ruption in the water service for a few hours. . . We are so spoiled with the bound- less supply of wonderfully soft water we have here that we never realize how much we use, or how much we take this service for granted. During the extreme cold spell most of us kept a small supply on hand as a precaution since broken pipes in town can cause a temporary shut off. How- ever, by Tuesday night we'd all grown careless and when a pipe at the main in- take burst there were many who didn't have enough wa-ter to boil the breakfast coffee next morning. Then those people in and near town who have wells or pumps became quite popu- lar, having visitors who hadn't called since the last time the water was off! . . . So all day Wednesday wa-ter was carefully hoarded and everybody waited. About ten there was omin-ous growlings in the pipes and all over town people rushed to turn on faucets, and that she gushed! . . . Perhaps every so often this very thing should happen to make us conscious once more for this, one of the most common place bless- ings we enjoy, but one we really miss. And we should say "Thanks" to those in charge who always start right in and stick with the job of repairing the trouble till it's all done! . . .
