Swain, Yancey Farm Homes To Be Surveyed

Raleigh—A survey of farm housing conditions will begin Monday in 14 North Carolina counties, it was announced today.

The survey will be conducted by a group of special enumerators who have completed a three-day instruction course at the State Department of Agriculture here.

Olaf Wakefield, a federal-state agricultural statistician, will supervise the project.

He said the final results will provide a record of farm construction and will show the quality of farm housing and facilities as related to farm family income. He added that these results will be used by government agencies, colleges agricultural groups and others interested in improving rural living conditions.

Similar surveys will be made in other states throughout the nation, he said. The counties to be covered include Yancey and Swain.
