

GARDEN TIME

ROBERT SCHMIDT
N.C. STATE COLLEGE

Small fruits and berries should have a place in every home garden because they adapt themselves to the usual methods of garden culture and they come into production so soon after planting.

The dewberry is one of the easiest to grow and one of the most universally adapted. It will succeed on any type of soil and, although it responds to fertilization, does not require a great deal of attention along that line. Plants may be set from now until the growing season begins in spring. The usual planting distance are 5 feet apart in the row with rows 5 to 8 feet apart. For garden culture dewberries are generally trained to stakes which are 5 to 6 feet high. Twenty-five plants should supply the average family with all the berries they will need. Plants set this winter will produce a full crop in June of 1953.

The red-fruited varieties such as Youngberry, Boysenberry, and Lavaca berry are generally recommended for home garden planting. These are claimed to be and are generally accepted as hybrids between a dewberry species and the red raspberry. They are of exceptionally high dessert quality when allowed to become fully ripe. However, at this stage they are quite soft and must be eaten at once. They cannot be shipped to market. There is very little difference between the above-named berries. Under our conditions the Boysenberry is somewhat larger than the others.

Thornless strains of these may be obtained and are recommended for home gardens because of greater ease in handling the canes. Sometimes the thornless plants will revert back to the thorny type. Propagations should always be made by means of tip layers of thornless canes if you wish to retain the thornless characteristic.

The Spirit Is What Counts

MYRON WARREN, Xenia, Ohio, grew up on a farm. About the time he was bedeviled with worry. Not his own worry but the worry of the farmers: it might rain and the hay wasn't in. It might not rain, and the seedlings were up. Blackleg might get among the cattle; insects might take over the crops. A little closer to the house, for the farmer's wife: the birds might get at her garden; a fox might steal in on the chickens. Yes, there's plenty to worry about during the "calm, peaceful, plentiful life of the farmer."

Carnegie

But even while very young, Myron began to wonder why the farmers worried about something over which they had no control? Why didn't they just work toward a good result and not think about rain and drought? Why didn't they just take care of the cattle? Usually Blackleg didn't attack them. They could take certain measures to ward off insects, and since that was all the control they had over them, why didn't they take those measures and stop worrying until the insects actually got at the crops? The farmer's wife nearly always has a most successful garden and every fall her chicken and egg money swell her bank account so why, in Heaven's name, did she worry for fear good luck wouldn't come? God is in his Heaven!

His Faith in God became his standby. If you didn't believe in Him, it didn't matter much what happened, anyway, and his faith and philosophy stood Myron in good stead when he was called upon to photograph a crash in which one of his good friends was killed. At first, he was nauseated when he saw particles of flesh here and there. Then he told himself, if the one thing that counted was the spirit, it had departed, and it couldn't matter much in what way this had happened. Too, he was helping prevent further such accidents if he made good pictures that help determine the cause of the accident.
