MORE ABOUT— AROUND THE DISTRICT
 fish was raw and badly scared up. How did the fish get that way? If it was a wild animal there was a way to find out. That evening, Mr. Boone set some steel traps on the ground around the fences. He also placed traps on the tops of four fence posts at the pools. He covered the traps with moss.

The next morning, he rushed out of the house to see what, if anything, he had caught. An amazing sight greeted his eyes atop one of the posts—a feathered creature was wildly flapping its wings in an attempt to escape the trap that held it. It turned out to be, of all things, a Barred or hoot owl. Still not certain that the owl was the culprit, Mr. Boone put him out of his misery and took him into the barn where he cut him open. Here was the solution to the mystery—the owl's stomach was loaded with trout. "Case of the Vanishing Trout"—closed.
