

GARDEN TIME
ROBERT SCHMIDT
N. C. STATE COLLEGE

If you haven't already done so, it is time to sow tomato, pepper and eggplant seed in hotbeds, coldframes or flats in the kitchen windows. Although it is much easier to buy plants for the garden, we like to grow our own tomato plants. Then we know what we are getting. The seed sowing date will depend on how soon the weather will permit setting in the field. It usually takes from five to eight weeks to produce tomato plants large enough to set, depending on the temperature of the plant bed. Pepper and eggplant are a little slower in developing. By figuring back from the last probable frost date we can determine when to sow the seed. By sowing the seed thinly, it may not be necessary to transplant, but usually transplanting to two inches apart about a week after the plants come up will give much stronger and stockier plants. There is no advantage in growing plants to blooming size before setting in the field. The young plants will stand the shock of transplanting better than the older ones. Where no fusarium wilt is present, good early varieties are Valiant and Urbana. Earliana, of course, is an old standby. For the main crop Rutgers and Marglobe are popular. Of the hybrids, Burpee's Big Boy has done very well for us.

If the garden soil is infected with fusarium wilt, it is advisable to use only such varieties as Homestead and Jefferson, which are highly resistant to fusarium wilt. These are not early varieties but will survive the wilt.

The best variety of pepper is probably California Wonder. It is a good grower and has heavy meaty fruits.

Eggplant is not a common vegetable in North Carolina gardens but should be grown more. The Florida Highbush and Ft. Myers Market are good varieties. As soon as eggplants are set in the field the plants should be covered with a DDT dust or spray to prevent flea beetles and potato beetles from destroying them.

Plantings of these crops can be made at least two weeks earlier if the plants are covered with hotcaps or other plant protectors.

ABDICATES—King Norodom Sihanouk, 33, youthful monarch of Indo-Chinese kingdom of Cambodia has abdicated in a dramatic protest against left-wing political criticism of his pro-western policies and his government reform program. He has turned over the throne of Cambodia to his 60 year old father, Norodom Suramarit.

U. S. NAVY BROKEN SERVICE REENLISTMENTS

It was announced today by L. E. Fay, Chief Petty Officer in charge of the Navy Recruiting Station, Asheville, N. C. that men in certain pay grades of 56 different ratings who have been discharged, more than three months but less than one year may now be reenlisted in the same pay grade they held at time of discharge, provided the reenlistment is effected by June 30, 1955.

A lot of folks whose business it is to be concerned about the future of our country seem to think that in the near future we may be in danger of losing the position of world superiority we now hold in science, atomic industry, military weapons, engineering, etc.

There's general complaint that we aren't coming up with enough young people who are interested in pursuing science, research and the like as a career.

I'm sure that these people know what they are talking about. At least, they know an awful sight more about it than I do. Yet, I hope they don't (as some have suggested) attempt to revamp our high school system (make it more specialized) in order to push young people into careers they don't choose for themselves.

Maybe the school system needs working-over in some ways, but it would be sheer folly to do away with most of the courses in English, history and such in order to make room for studies on nuclear whatnot. Specialized colleges and universities—where students in a particular field are hardly on speaking-terms with their contemporaries following another course of study—are bad enough.

But, let's don't get it down to the high school level. Can't you see it? Two teen-agers sitting at a soda fountain—in walks another.

"There's Joe Jones, let's ask him to join us," says one.

"What?" exclaims the other? "And listen to all the drivel that hydrogen hep-cat puts out! Let's go on with our discussion of neoplasticism."

DALE CARNEGIE

AUTHOR OF "HOW TO STOP WORRYING AND START LIVING"

MRS. JOE BATIS, 882 Cedar Street, Abilene, Texas, says she often heard as a child, "Look at those children, not a worry in the world." But she remembers that even before she started to school, she worried for fear something would happen to her mother. Her father died when she was eighteen months old, so her mother was her little world.

After she started to school, she had other worries. She was afraid she wouldn't pass in her school work. During her sophomore year in high school, the doctor told her mother that she was going to have a nervous breakdown if she did not get away from her school work for a while. So her mother took her on a two week vacation. This helped, but after a few weeks she fell into the same old rut of worry. She graduated and thus ended that line of worry, didn't seem to help her condition, for when she went to work for the telephone company she was worried for fear she wouldn't do her work just right. She had two nervous breakdowns while working there. Why? Worry!

CARNEGIE

Then the one thing she had feared most, happened. Her mother died. Her world was shattered, but she was made to realize that no matter how much she grieved or worried about her mother's death, it would not bring her back.

Finally she ran across a book on worry which illustrated so many situations similar to hers, and which showed her how futile it is to worry, that she began thinking differently. Now, when she starts to worry, she breathes a prayer to God to take her worries from her—and He has never failed her.
