Soil Conservation News

by Lewis W. Dameron

Spring is here, and along with spring weather we are having some heavy rains, causing considerable soil and water losses to farmers whose fields are not prepared in such a way as to minimize these losses.

Several Yancey farmers are using contour strip cropping systems of cultivating and re-seeding their steep land this spring, to prevent excessive run off of rain with erosion losses. Personnel of the Yancey County Soil Conservation District have recently assisted the following farmers with the laying out of contour strips: Mrs. T. A. McKinney and Carl McKinney of Horton Hill community; Paul Bailey of Bee Log; Calvin Robinson of Green Mountain, and James B. Stamey of Jacks Creek.

At least one sod strip will remain between each cultivated strip to slow down the run off of rains and to catch any soil that may move from the cultivated strips. Since the strips are laid out on the contour, all tillage operations are on a level line, making it easier on both the farmer and his workstock in cultivating and harvesting his crops.

Tile and open ditch drainage are two important soil and water conservation practices that many farmers are carrying out this spring. Personnel of the Yancey Soil Conservation District assisted 16 farmers during the months of March and April in surveying wet areas on their farms for tile and open ditch drains. Approximately 10,000 feet of tile drainage and 8000 feet of open ditches were laid out on these farms.

By draining the wet areas on their farms, these farmers are able to move more of their row crops to fields that have the least erosion hazard and are normally more productive than their other land. The steeper land under cultivation can then be seeded to permanent hay or pasture mixtures, thus greatly reducing the erosion hazard on that land.

played a comprehensive knowledge of both field and headquarters intelligence procedures and objectives in performance of these assignments. As a unit commander he developed an outstanding intelligence collection organization.

"Later, as operations staff officer, he played an able role in the implementation of a new training and personnel organization program designed to prepare the unit for changing operational requirements. Major Nowicki also exercised sound judgement in coordinating the activities of field agencies and insuring the formulation and adoption of productive plans and policies. His insight into the problems peculiar to field intelligence practices enabled him to contribute significantly to the development of realistic and effective collection procedures. Major Nowicki's superior and devoted efforts in behalf of this mission reflect credit upon himself and the military services."
