CHECKERBOARD NEWS

Let's all remember June Dairy Month and try to increase our use of this most nearly perfect of foods. The nutritionists tell us that we get more of the essential elements and vitamins from milk than from any other one source and quite often its more economical. In addition to milk we have dozens of milk products—several types of cheese, ice cream, etc., and all are excellent foods both nutritionally and from a taste standpoint.

We have a lot of farmers producing either Grade A or Grade C milk in Yancey County and they are vitally interested in all of you, using just a little more milk. Let's help them out and drink milk instead of some other beverage.

"Year's Outlook Bright for Hogmen on Profit"

Gil Fronig, manager of the Purina Research Farm hog and steer fattening units, says the outlook is still rosy for hogmen who follow a sound feeding and management program.

This year the experts look for the average price to be near the $20 mark. Peak prices are expected soon—in early or mid-summer. This means hogmen should push hogs fast to get them to early markets.

Let us help you switch your hogs to the Purina Progress now. Gets hogs to market in 5 months. Takes only 5 bushels of corn or 305 lbs. of milo or 320 lbs. of barley and 45 lbs. of Hog Chow to make 100 lbs. of pork.

More than 52,000 pigs raised at the Purina Research Farm built this Program.

Results thousands of hogmen get prove it to be right.

June Is National Dairy Month

Are we, the dairymen, encouraging our friends and families to use more dairy products in our everyday living? If not, we should be.

If every person in America would drink just one additional glass of cold, delicious, nutritious milk a day, we would be faced with a shortage rather than a surplus. Let's all encourage greater consumption of milk by setting the example in our own homes.

Purina Plan Grows Pullets at Low Cost

Many poultrymen have grown sturdy, well-developed layers on only 18 pounds of feed per bird on Purina's famous Growing Chow and grain program. This program takes the birds from 4½ weeks to 20 to 24 weeks. Takes only 6 pounds of Growing Chow and 12 lbs. of grain on good range to grow the average pullet.

For feeding ease and uniformity of pullets many farmers prefer Purina Growena, a complete feed. Only 16 to 18 lbs. of Growena is required for the average pullet. Let's figure to see which program is best suited to your needs.

Wives' Corner

With Yancey Homemakers by Louise Tones

We have let another spring go by without getting any baby chicks to start a laying flock. Our two little girls are getting impatient to have chickens of our own. And so am I.

My first years in Yancey County were so bound up with chickens that life hasn't seemed quite complete ever since we stopped keeping them. Twelve years ago come next October, we had some three hundred pullets just starting to lay. The man of the house had raised them and was to be the chicken farmer, but our household, like many others in war years, was suddenly left unmanned. I was left with the three hundred pullets, a stack of government bulletins, and a full supply of ignorance and inexperience. Instead of turning to the latest novel or a book of inspirational poetry when I had time to read, I pored

MISS WANDA BURGIN RECEIVES NURSING CAP

Miss Wanda Y. Burgin, Student Nurse of Cabarrus Memorial Hospital, Concord, N. C. received her cap at capping exercise May 20th, 7:30 p. m. with nightgale candle light ceremony at Calvary Evangelical Lutheran Church in Concord.

She is the daughter of Mrs. Arthurine Burgin, formerly of Celso, who is at present on the nursing staff at the Watouga Hospital in Boone. Wanda attended grammar grades at Harward school in Celso, also Banner Elk school. Graduated from Cranberry High School May, 1954, Cranberry, N. C.

Mrs. Burgin's daughter Virginia, and son Bill, attended the capping exercise.

over "Disease and Parasites of Poultry" and wondered how many of the horrid things that could happen to chickens would happen to ours.

Before long one horrid thing did happen. Some of the pullets started gasping for breath. Their bright red combs and wattles turned sickly purple. On opening their beaks one could see a white cheesy substance blocking their throats. "Laryngo-trachitis" I believe the government bulletin said, and it was not optimistic about the outcome. Nevertheless I took the sick hens into the house to try some amateur doctoring holding their mouths open and removing part of the obstruction from their throats with tweezers. This seemed futile, since the first two hens died.

A Minor Miracle

One chilly night I sat alone by the fireplace, struggling with the third dying hen by the light of a kerosene lamp, picking at the stuff inside her throat which was robbing her of air and life, certain that I would fail with her as with the others and see the whole flock wiped out. The job at hand was dirty, smelly, and tedious. The long-range prospect was dreary. What a life, I thought. How my time was being wasted, when there was so much important work to be done in the world. Then a thought struck me like a dash of cold water in the face: "Feeling sorry for yourself, are you? Just stop to think how many people in the world would give anything to trade places with you right now. What a privilege to be free to try to heal anything, even a chicken, in times like these!"

Immediately afterwards the mass that was blocking the hen's throat yielded to the tweezers in my hand and came away all at once. The hen gave a startled squawk as the air rushed back into her lungs. The red color visibly seeped back into her comb and wattles. She stood up and looked around with a "where am I?" expression and began preening her ruffled feathers. She started laying again in a few days. There were no further losses from the disease.

When the hens came into full production, the egg supply got ahead of the local demand. This problem was solved by a contract with one firm to handle all the eggs I had to sell. Sizable egg checks coming in were most welcome. By culling rigorously before packing the cases, I could still let neighbors have good fresh eggs that were off-size, misshapen, or slightly cracked. It was therefore quite an unpleasant shock one day to open the egg check and find it much smaller than usual, with the grading report showing that several cases had been graded "checked" (having small cracks) and given the lowest price.

My first impulse was to write a scorching letter. Then I cooled off a bit. Had I ever told the people in the company when I was pleased with the fairness and accuracy they had shown in all previous dealings with me? No. Well, wasn't it about time I? So my letter opened with an expression of appreciation for all these satisfactory dealings, before going on to tell of the one unsatisfactory dealing.

A few days later I received another check and a letter from an official of the company. His letter made me thankful that the scorching letter I had first planned did not get written, since he was evidently accustomed to receiving that sort of response when mistakes were made. Having someone remember to mention the good things along with the bad had given him a pleasant surprise. I'm not sure whether the rest of this story adds or detracts, but anyway it is true: the check which he sent to correct the mistake made the eggs bring more than they would have without the mistake.
