EDITORIAL COMMENT

Now that we have our United Fund organization it might be well to re-view what it means to the community.

First, to the average merchant who has always been harassed by every kind of fund raiser, it means an opportunity to plan his giving and relief from perpetual touches for handouts. About ninety per cent of the "gimme" that he has been exposed to should be covered by United.

Then the fund raiser. It seems that the same persons get "dragged in" on most fund raising campaigns. Now they can discharge their duty by one drive a year. And it should be easier.

The charities, too will benefit. Each organization can discuss its needs with the United Fund organization, decide on a fair quota in relation to other needs and the county's capacity to raise funds and be assured of getting its share.

For the county as a whole it means more money for worthwhile charities and organizations. Instead of over-subscribing some charities with strong emotional appeal and failing to meet needs of other equally worthy but less sensational charities it will equalize the take of each. This will mean more money to be used here in our own county.

But along with these benefits we need to recognize certain obligations. In the first place, we must realize that we will have to dig a lot deeper

VIOLET RAYS ON OUR WAYS

By H. M. Alley

Note: This column is written with malice toward none, but with the common good of all in mind.

NOTE TO FRIEND "WHO-SOEVER": Your letter addressed to me through last week's paper was duly received and contents carefully noted. I am flattered to be challenged by such an able and friendly opponent. It would be most interesting to meet you in private or public discussion or debate upon the current issue or some more important question, though I hasten to assure you that this is not intended as an open challenge or invitation for such a verbal tilt.

Since you desire to "remain an anonymous friend," I certainly shall respect your wishes. into our jeans when the United Fund solicitor calls than we did for any of the other drives. We can't think of it as another drive for money, but as almost ALL the drives packed into one. United Appeal is not a scheme to do away with solicitations for worthwhile charities. It is a method of systematizing both the giving and receiving of funds for charity.

In fact, all considered, I can't say that I blame you! Yet, you would be surprised, I'm sure, if we could sit down and talk together, how readily and wholly I could and would agree with some of your expressed views. SOME, I say. Certainly not all.

Being aware of the fact that a newspaper is not the proper medium of a continued controversy between two people, and that a columnist should not expect everybody to agree with all he writes, or feel that he must necessarily defend his challenged views in every instance, I must deny myself of the amusement and satisfaction of entering a few of the wide open and vulnerable spots in your defense of the "Dry Land Bathing Beauties" in your last treatise. However, I hope the editor will not deny you of the privilege of a last word, should you desire to further express yourself on the subject. But of course he wouldn't, for he knows that you and I have awakened more readers interest in his periodical within the last month with our frank discussion of this Bathing Suit issue than anything that has happened since the last General election.

Uncle Josh says: "Hold on thar a minit afore ye sine off. I reckon I has a right to my say, since I'm yer pardner in this here ritin bizness. An I want t'tell this a-nonymouse friend, mister Howsoever, that I were plumb riled by what he went an' sed 'bout me in his last pary-gram. He tried ter make hit plumb plain that I'm a-scairt, an ignorant also of honey bees. I figgers, I've handled a heap more bees, an et a heap more Sourwood honey than he ever did. I knows they's some fellars that bees'll sting more'n everybody. An I repeats what I sed before not long ago, recently, that hit's allus been hard fer me to keep my mind on honey an buttered biskits with a swarm o' mad honeybees a-buzzin aroun my hed.

"Same way, hit's hard fer red-blooded men t' keep ther mind on angels or roses when they sees wimmin an gals a-goin along the sidewalk an high-ways dressed in ther shorties bathin suits, or flimsies. An to thing thet mister Whoso-hower would quote the Good Book, an suggest that all each pore ole earth-bound men oughter have their eyes plucked out. Why, that's plumb heartless,, mister. Effen hit comes to thet, most of us pore devils will be left stone blind. Moreover, also, I'd bet a hive o' honey bees thet our 'nonymouse friend would lose at least one o' his eyes, too, also!

"Ouch! Ouch! Biff! Bop! Sock! Thud!" "Now, I reckon ye'll be satisfied, Mister Howsoever. Thet racket ye jist, heard were Sally, my wife, a-whackin me over the back an elsewhere. She'd tip-toed up behine my cheer an was a standin thar a-readin over my shoulder. Now I'm in fer it, shore. So, if ye're any friend o' mine, ye'd better git down to Cedar Crick an try to git my ole lady in a good humor agin. An I warns ye, hit mout be a sight easier to nive a swarm o' mad honeybees than t' git Sally quietified.

Speaking of bees reminds me: Early one morning last week, I stood by a trellis in our backyard admiring some beautiful Giant Morning Glories. Soon I was attracted to a large Bumble Bee industriously going from blossom to blossom gathering pollen. At that early hour he seemed to be oblivious to the existence of any other creature on earth beside himself, as he went droning about on those rapid wings, gathering food for himself and others of his kind, and at the same time assisting Mother Nature in her all-important work of pollination.

As I continued to watch Brother Bumble Bee, I thought how every highway, street and mart of trade in all the world would come alive in another hour, with people who would go flitting from one thing to another all day long. Some industriously applying themselves to gathering provisions, knowledge, and wealth, while others would spend the day just buzzing around!... 'Nuff Sed.

DEYTON FARM SUPPLY Yancey County CHECKERBOARD NEWS by Royce Lee Howell

Now that the pullets that started last spring are nearing laying age be sure they go in the laying house in good condition. Most pullets need to be wormed and checked for lice mites. A one week treatment with Chek-R-Ton will get the worms and at the same time tone her up for high and profitable production. Purina lice powder or poultry insecticide will rid her of lice. Don't forget—a hen infected with parasites will not be profitable.

If your neighbor has a pig that's really growing, the chances are good that he is either feeding a complete purina Hog Ration or Supplement and Corn. Many people feed corn alone but the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture says 50 lbs. of supplement will replace 5 to 7 bushels of corn in producing only 100 lbs. pork. Corn is an excellent hog feed but when fed alone runs the cost of gain entirely too high.

Farrowing Crates Save Baby Pigs "Worth its weight in pigs." That's what many hog men say about the value of farrowing crates. The idea comes from Purina's Research Farm, Gray Summit, Mo. The crate is 2 1/2 x 7 1/2 feet, with 2 x 4 framing and 1 x 6 siding. Important point is the 10 inches between the floor and the first sideboard. This space serves as a guard rail and gives room to work with the sow. Pigs move out under heat lamps hung right outside the crate. If you use native or scrap lumber, this crate should not cost more than $5.

STORY OF A PURINA FARM SOW

Just a few hours ago this sow farrowed 11 husky pigs weighing 2 1/2-3 lbs. each. And because she was conditioned on the Purina Program, her udder is full of milk to get the pigs off to a fast start... carry them through to weaning.

She used the raw materials fed during gestation and produced a fine finished product... a vigorous litter. If her feed had not provided the needed raw materials during gestation, chances are she would not have produced this big litter. Resorbed embryos, runts and dead pigs would have resulted, if her ration had not been "right"

If you are not satisfied with the job your sows are doing, let us explain the Purina Feeding Program. It builds sows and baby pigs. You can now get Steer Fatena with Stilbestrol for Even Better Results Purina's Steer Feeding Program is designed to help you get more from the things you raise. Steer Fatena stimulates bacterial activity in the rumen—helps make your grain and roughage go farther.
