N.C. STATE COLLEGE

June is the month for roses as well as for brides, especially in the central and western portions of the state. They are beautiful right now in spite of the dry weather. There are many new varieties of hybrid-tea roses being introduced each year, more than the average rose fan can afford to keep up with.

Different rose varieties succeed under different environmental conditions under your own garden conditions and the best advice is to try them. If they grow well, everything is fine. If they have some weakness and do not grow well be prepared to discard them without hesitation. There are too many good ones to waste time on the weak ones. The ones that have won many ribbons at the shows are Peace, Crimson Glory, Rubaiyat and Charlotte Armstrong. There are many other good ones but these have been outstanding.

Roses like other plants have many serious pests. Black spot and mildew are very common diseases attacking the leaves of roses. The plant pathologists recommend a spray of ferate or Captan for black spot, and sulphur for mildew, are for the most part preventives. Sprays for the control of diseases not cures and therefore must be applied to the plant before the disease gains a foothold.

There are two insect pests which cause a great deal of trouble to rose growers: aphids and thrips. Aphids (plant lice) are very easily controlled by nicotine sulphate. Malathion or rotenone sprays. Thrips are difficult to control because it is not easy to put the spray on them. DDT and Lindane are probably the best sprays for thrip control.

For more detailed information on rose culture, varieties and pest control write to the N. C. Agricultural Extension Division for Extension Circular 200 on Successful Rose Culture.

"I REMEMBER"
BY THE OLD TIMERS

From Mrs. Charles H. Clark, Sr., Murfreesboro, Tennessee: It was a bright spring morning seventy-four years ago, but the picture is as clear in my mind as if it were framed and hung upon the wall. I, a little girl of half past five, sat on a little stool that had once been part of a spinning wheel, in a bright patch of sunshine on the smooth white scrubbed floor of my grandfather's room. My grandfather, supported by huge white pillows, sat in his bed. His snow-white hair made a halo around his thin, pale face, but his blue eyes snapped with fire.

"I tell you, John," he said to the neighbor who sat in a chair tilted back against the wall behind me. I thought his ankles looked too small to support his huge dangling feet.

"I tell you, John, they shall not cut another dang one of my good cedars. Who ever heard of stringing a clothesline on poles and talking over it all of the thirty-two miles to the city!"

I looked out the window at the shining line stretched across the back yard on to the hillside where the cedars seemed to touch the sky. I was not too far away from the belief that a pumpkin could be a coach, and rats horses. The stories my sister read to me from her McGuffey's reader of the mill that ground salt and the little elves who made shoes seemed very real. "Perhaps," I thought, "they will string a clothesline on poles and talk over it."

Some months later, the telephone line from Nashville to Murfreesboro was completed. And I did talk over it to my sister in the city.

for fifteen minutes and then wash in clean water and more suds.

Need something to dry in a hurry? Turn on an electric fan in a room with cross ventilation. It will be dry in a very short time.

Many materials these days are hung dripping wet, without any wringing. If you use metal hangers for these, be certain they are wrapped with clean paper or towel so the clothes do not get rust stains on them.

Crumpled garments which are clean can be hung in the bathroom after the room has been steamed from letting the tub or shower run for a few minutes. The steam will remove wrinkles and save you much pressing.

Spanish moss which drapes trees, fences and wires from Virginia southward is not a parasite but an epiphyte or air plant related to the pineapple. It gets no nourishment from its host.

NORTH CAROLINA'S POSITIVE APPROACH TO JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

What is being done about juvenile delinquency in North Carolina? What are the facts about the present situation?

What positive steps are being taken to improve the situation for the future?

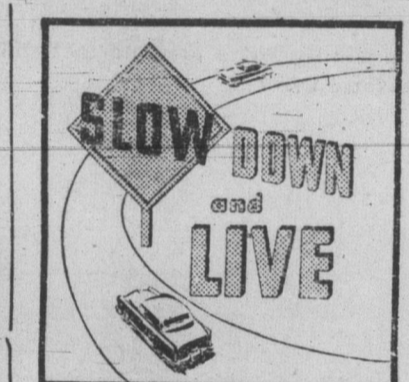

These are questions which it is pertinent to consider as North Carolinians view what is one of the nation's problems, that of juvenile delinquency.

Some of these questions are answered in a recent study made by the State Board of Public Welfare released this month in "Public Welfare Statistics."

It should be stated at the start that North Carolina has a relatively favorable record in the area of juvenile delinquency as compared with other states. However, there is no disposition on the part of those concerned with child welfare on the general welfare of the State to be satisfied with present attainments or to relax their efforts to improve the situation.

During 1955, the study showed, there were a few less official hearings on juvenile delinquency referrals to the 106 domestic relations and juvenile courts in North Carolina than there were in 1954. Despite the sharply rising number of children in the State there were 2,990 official hearings on juvenile delinquency cases in 1955 as against 3,004 such hearings in 1954.

There was a total of 5,129 official hearings involving children reported by the domestic relations and juvenile courts to the State Board of Public Welfare which complies the statistics for the State. This total includes a 36 per cent increase in special proceedings which reflects increased concern for the legal protection of children.

Nearly three fifths of the delinquent boys were charged with some type of theft. The next common reason for referral for boys for delinquency was truancy (14.3 per cent) and the third most common reason was "acts of carelessness or mischief" (12.1 per cent).

Truancy was the most common reason for referral of delinquent girls, accounting for 27.7 per cent. Next in frequency came "being ungovernable," for which 22.7 per cent of the girls were referred. Nineteen per cent of the delinquent girls were referred for "running away."

Sixteen per cent of the boys and twenty-three per cent of the girls in delinquency hearings were committed to institutions, mostly to training schools. Thirty-seven per cent of the children were placed under the supervision of probation officers, including 19.4 per cent who were to be supervised by officers on the staffs of special courts and 17.3 per cent who were placed under the supervision of the superintendent of public welfare in his capacity as chief probation officer. An additional 12.6 per cent of the children were referred to the county department of public welfare for services.

Nearly one-half of the delinquent children came from broken-homes. Only 55 per cent of the boys and 39 per cent of the girls involved in delinquency hearings had parents living together.
