"I REMEMBER" BY THE OLD TIMERS

From Mrs. M. S. Sweet, Onawa, Iowa: I remember Mother telling of her childhood life in Western Kansas in the 1830's. They lived in a dug-out between Hendon and Oberlin, Kansas. She had three miles to walk to school, and cut across the prairie on foot. She told of several occasions when a pack of coyotes followed her, staying quite a distance behind. If she ran, they would also run, but luckily, they always stayed about the same distance from her.

Their drinking water came from a dug well; and she told of getting typhoid fever and losing all of her blond hair. When it came back, it was a medium brown. She told of another instance of not being able to straighten her leg for a long time and getting around only by resting her knee on a chair seat, then pushing the chair in front of her. It sounds like the polio of today, and was probably caused by their living conditions.

She also told of the fierce prairie fires that raged out of control in the tall native grass. The women would also have to go out and help fight the fires. She told of her parents locking her in the dug-out while they fought the fires. She was safer there, because the fire would go right over her head and leave her unharmed.

While my mother is not alive to tell her own story, I thought I would send it in. We are so smug today in our everyday living that we often forget just what our ancestors had to go through to make this country a wonderful place for us to live in.

Color plays an important part in the courtship of butterflies. A male is most attracted to a female bearing its own colors. In two species the scarlet wing patch is a recognition sign. Orange and blue are vital hues for other species.

Coal and salt don't seem to go together but they often do, especially in freezing weather. It takes 400 pounds of salt to prevent freezing of coal in a hopper car.

About one million Americans already gain their livelihood by helping provide goods and services for recreation and this figure is likely to increase as time passes.
