This Week In History

In some parts of the world, January 6 is known as Old Christmas Day. Under an old style calendar, Christmas fell on January 6. This day is the Feast of the Epiphany and in some parts of the world is still preceded by "Twelfth Night" observances. The 12th Night Cake is still a custom in France, where it probably originated, but Twelfth Night is believed to have started as a festival honoring the Magi or three wise men who came to find the Christ Child. January 6 is the birthday of such famous persons as Joan d'Arc, Benjamin Franklin and Theodore Roosevelt.

January 7 in history records the birthday of Millard Fillmore, 13th U.S. President (1800); first balloon flight across the English Channel (1785); and first revenue passengers carried on railroad, (1830).

On January 8, 1918, Mississippi was first state to ratify the Prohibition Amendment; on this date in 1815, Andrew Jackson won the Battle of New Orleans. On January 9, 1845, General MacArthur returned to Luzon. January 10, 1775 is the birthdate of the U.S. Marine Alexander Hamilton was born on Jan. 11, 1757 and on January 12, 1492, the Earhart-Putnam started solo flight across the Pacific. In 1847, explorers Martin and Osa Johnson were killed.
