Indian Arrowheads Is A Favorite Hobby To Collectors

By: Donald McCourry
Indian Arrowheads here in this area are not too plentiful any more since the Arrowhead collectors have begun to collect them and now they about completely found them all. We ourselves like to search and find Arrowheads too although they are now so plentiful. We were recently in the Tipton Hill area and at Frank Griffith's Store we estimated seeing approximately 250 Arrowheads. Some of these Arrowheads was large as six inches long. This was amazing to see all of those Indian Arrowheads in one location. It is truly a fact if the Indians really did make the Arrowheads which they did. The Indian flints, (as we call them), are really fine objects to start fires if there isn't any matches around! The writer can recall the time when he tried to start fires with flints of anyone can take a file and make sparks come forth from the flints, and let the sparks fall on some paper, and this will most likely ignite. There are a certain place here on Big Ridge Mountain that anyone can see North Toe River in three different places, approximately two miles apart from each other, and never move from their feet.

I have heard said for many years where you can see the river in three places from one spot, right there is where a treasure is! This of course, is where the Indians buried leaving this territory.

This writer always believed that the Indians never did have any money in their possession, especially here in these mountainous sections since if they really did have money where did they spend it at? There was not any grocery stores as natives tells us and far back history is recorded when the first settlers settled in these mountainous areas. They have no words in their story nor otherwise situations for the expenditure prodigal.

We find it very interesting to know back when the Indians dwelled in these sections, which we would say up until about one hundred to one-hundred and fifty years ago they lived mostly on wild animals and their prodigality was never to great since they had something to eat when some spectacle animal was spectacular.

Since we believe the Indians fed on wildlife why did they have use for money? There is not anything to buy unless they might have swapped it to their neighbors for something new that they did not have anything like Or something more excellent than theirs.

We learned recently of a tobacco which is called "Indian-Tobacco", and this tobacco was said to be for making antispasmodic cut of. This is a very important medicine. The medicine that the Indians used was made from some kind of a wild herb and I would say it was some medicine too. The way the Indians of olden times would cure sores was by burning it with hot ashes and then cure the sore.

The Indians of olden times was very engaged in attention of making rock objects as well as flints. A friend here on Big Ridge Mountain approximately thirty years ago, located and determined that he presumed was an object which the Indians made. The object was in the form of a rabbit; about six inches long. Although it was made from rock, this fellow says he would have not taken five dollars for this stone, but he had it disposed, or misplaced, and as now cannot find it nowhere.

Charlie Freeman of Spruce Pine, N. C., several years ago reported to the writer, that he thinks that the Indians mostly dwelled in the area near the rivers. Evidently they did since some of the first settlers here proclaimed they had some reactions with them more often than one time. Indians Arrowheads are a nature for remembrances.
