Lesson In History

Sometimes you don't know exactly how ignorant you are. Take for instance the other day I was in a store kind of "chewing the fat" with a bunch of fellers when a bright eyed lad, hungry for knowledge, walked in and said "just how did Daniel Boone die?" I said "well, I didn't know Daniel was dead. I thought he was still down in his shop fashioning that pretty wrought iron work that so many people are crazy about."

Then this feller said "I don't mean that Daniel Boone, I mean the other Daniel Boone." And I said "well, I didn't know he was dead either. I see him just about every week on T. V. shooting Indians as always."

And this other feller in the crowd that I knew had an eye for pretty women, said, "why I know how he died, he was playing around with a good looking Indian Squaw and his wife, Becky, caught up with him and shot him right between the eyes."

There was another feller kinda on the heavy side with a pudgy stomach, said, "Now that ain't the way it was at all, the way I learned it was that he got fondered on dried punkin and died."

I realized by that time that

I had already showed my ignorance and I kinda thought well, I'll be a student of the driving force of humanity. That first feller, I decided, liked to sit back and dream and think of beautiful women.

Then there was this other feller that got his pleasures out of getting his feet under a well laden table.

The young student of history looked from one to the other and didn't know what to believe.

I decided that I'd become a student of history, too. So I went home and started searching through the B's in the encyclopedia and finally found Dan'l. And you know, that feller, with the pudgy mid-section came close to having the right dope on how that famous frontiersman came to die. According to my encyclopedia Dan'l lived to the ripe old age of 86 then gorged himself with sweet potatoes and it killed him.

It may be that that feller I surmised liked to eat so well just couldn't tell the difference in a sweet tater pie and punkin pie.

Anyway, that's the end of that. And I'm a better historian now than I was before the question came up.

St. Luke
By Walter S. Greene

St. Luke is without doubt one of the ablest and most interesting of all the Bible writers. He has the unique distinction of being the only Gentile among them. He was a Greek, while all the others were Jews or Hebrews.

Luke was a physician, but he won much more distinction as a writer. We are reminded of Zane Grey who left the medical profession and became famous as a writer.

St. Paul refers to Luke as the "beloved physician." It seems that he was a native of Antioch in Syria. Some commentators think that he and Titus were brothers. Paul and Luke probably met for the first time because Luke was a physician, and Paul was in need of his services at the time. It is possible that this was one reason why he was frequently the companion of Paul in his journey's and his imprisonment.

Luke did not write as many books as did Paul, but he did write two of the most famous books of all time. He was author of, "The Gospel According to St. Luke," and "The Acts." These show that he was a writer of the first rank and of artistic skill. One writer calls Luke's Gospels, "the most beautiful book that was ever written." None of the other evangelists shows so clearly the love and sympathy of Jesus for the sinner, the outcast and unfortunate. There is a reverence for women as, the story unfolds, which shows that the writer was far ahead of his time.

It would seem that Matthew wrote primarily for the Jews; and Mark, for the Roman world; Luke wrote for the Greek world, and John for all christians.

Luke joined Paul at Troas on the second missionary tour. At that point in his narrative he began to refer to Paul and his party as "we" instead of "they". He was with Paul on his voyage from Caesaria to Rome, and he shared the dangers and hardships of the trip.

We know that Luke was with Paul during his final imprisonment in the dungeon at Rome. Paul wrote in his last letter to Timothy that "only Luke is with me". This is our last glimpse of a true and loyal friend in a time of danger and peril.

Note: In case some of you are wondering why Mr. W. S. Greene's name at the top of this article. He is one of Light of Truth's writers. I share space with him. I hope that you won't be to confused by seeing my name and then seeing Mr. Greene's to these articles. Light of Truth is just now being published and if you would like to have a free copy, just send your name and address to me. But remember you must send for it now. If you don't you may not get the one this month: Hurry! William D. Robinson.

'Get Conservation-Minded Says Randolph

Farmers who are gearing up for springtime operations are urged to "include conservation in their plans and their thinking."

J. T. Randolph, Office Manager for the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, reminded farmers that those who need some particular conservation project on their land this year and who have not always done so are invited to discuss their plans with their ASC county committee. Cost sharing assistance through the ACP may still be available for needed conservation work.

Now is a good time to plan and carry out needed conservation, Randolph declared. Many farmers this spring are setting aside land for a conserving use under the feed grain and wheat diversion program. Conservation work of a mechanical or construction type can most easily be done while the land is out of production.

Springtime also in many areas is "rain time", Randolph said. It is, therefore the season when ACP water-conserving and erosion-prevention practices really perform—helping to get the water into the soil to help drought-proof the land for the summer.

Randolph points out that the time-tested ACP is one of the Nation's oldest farm-act programs. It is now in its 30th program year of continuous operation. Each year it encourages and assists in completing additional conservation of soil, water, grass, woods, and wildlife on more than a million farms and ranches. The farmer and the public match funds in bearing the cost of carrying out the practices.

Boone Production To Open June 25

BOONE—Dates for the 14th season presentation this summer of the "Horn in the West" outdoor drama here have been released.

The production opens on Friday, June 25, and closes on August 28.

"Horn in the West" will be performed each evening during the period except on Mondays. There will be one Monday evening performance however. It will be on July 5 to accommodate the increasing number of visitors to the mountains over the July 4 holidays.

The third annual Daniel Boone Wagon Train is scheduled to arrive in Boone on July 2 to celebrate the 14th season of the outdoor drama production, "Horn in the West" with a parade in Boone Saturday, July 3.

The play, featuring the great American explorer Daniel Boone, dramatizes the "birth of America" epic.
