The challenge of today in the field of higher education is the training of young people to assume roles of leadership in our ever-changing economic and social environment. These roles of leadership might very well include job opportunities which do not even exist at the present time.

Since the inception of this program, more emphasis each year has been placed upon the fundamentals, or what we may call the basic principles involved leading to a better understanding of the biological physical and social sciences; and the unlimited career opportunities available to the well trained mind.

Attention will be focused upon: the significance of progress being made in unlocking the secrets of genetics; equipment used for studying the structure and functions of microorganisms; a computer performing statistical operations; the role of the engineer in developing equipment to improve the production, processing and harvesting of food and fiber crops.

The use of radio-isotopes in studying the uptake of plant nutrients the role of the plant and animal breeder in crop and livestock improvement; the introduction of carbon dioxide into growth chambers to improve certain plant processes; the study of the effect light and temperature have on plant responses; irradiation of seeds.

In addition to the conducted tours to observe some of the experiments I have outlined, there will be visits to residence halls and other places of interest on the campus. Visitors will also have opportunity to learn about admission requirements, availability of scholarship and other forms of financial aid.

This year for the first time committees are working in all of the 100 counties. Get in touch with your county extension chairman or your high school principal for additional information and group travel plans.
