Perfect Coffee Always

Americans are the world's greatest coffee lovers, downing 441,000,000 cups daily. Stands to reason that making perfect coffee should be one of a homemaker's special talents.

Whether you perk, drip, or vacuum brew, there are certain inviolate rules: measure carefully, never guess or skimp (one level standard measure for every cup, and one for the pot); use freshly drawn cold water and superior blends of coffee; learn to judge the deep, non-watery color and flavorful aroma of excellent brew; and keep the coffee-maker spotlessly clean to prevent natural coffee oils from clinging to the inside of the pot and spoiling flavor. Stainless steel coffee-makers are the easiest to keep clean (use a sponge or cloth and mild detergent, never an abrasive), and because of their smart styling, can be brought right to the table.

Unless you're preparing demitasse, never brew less than two-thirds the maximum capacity of your coffee-maker. Consider owning both a small and large stainless steel coffee-maker.

For a gourmet touch—and a variety in taste—serve demitasse, extra strong coffee served in small cups, after dinner. Prepare by using two, instead of one, level standard measures of coffee per cup in drip or vacuum method. Go continental with Dutch coffee—put a cinnamon stick in each cup of demitasse, then float butter on top.

Brew espresso-flavor coffee right in your stainless steel coffee-maker without special equipment. After brewing coffee in regular fashion, simply add one measure of instant coffee for every cup, stir well, and serve in demitasse cups.

Always remember, coffee is most perfect when freshly prepared and served piping hot.
