"JUSTICE FOR ALL" - NBC NEWS SPECIAL OCT. 27

There is a great disparity in the state of justice in the United States. Equal recourse to the law is denied those people who cannot afford it.

This is the central idea of "Justice For All?" - an NBC News one hour color special to be presented Friday, October 27 at 10:00 p. m. on Channel 5. Donald Meaney, Vice President, NBC News today announced details of the program.

Bob Rogers is producing and directing the special, which takes a close look at the various patterns of life of people who experience inequities in the law because of their low economic status. NBC News correspondent Edwin Newman is the reporter.

"Justice For All?" starts with the premise that equal justice under American law requires legal representation in the form of a lawyer, but for most of America's 25 million poor this is virtually nonexistent. The major portion of the program will concentrate on three areas in the country which are representative of the urban, rural and migrant poor. All three groups have legal problems distinct from one another, but they share the common disadvantage of not having access to the law.

Rogers chose Cleveland to illustrate the urban poor. An interview with Tom Gray, a lawyer who operates the Near Westside Neighborhood Legal Services office for the poor, will show a cross-section of the typical problems that confront his clients - such as consumer, landlord-tenant, domestic and welfare cases. A public defender in a Cleveland County jail will be seen at work with his clients.

Salinas, California, will be visited as an example of the Mexican - American migrant workers. Here, Newman, will present a day in the life of a migrant worker, following him from early morning to late night.

Mr. Newman will explain that the problem facing the nation's poor is monumental, but that there have been initial steps taken to relieve it. Finally, Mr. Newman will interview Abe Fortas, formerly a prominent lawyer in Washington, D. C., and now a U. S. Supreme Court Justice.

Shorter Shooting Days For Duck & Goose Hunters Predicted

Shorter shooting days may be in the offing for duck and goose hunters this year at famed Lake Mattamuskeet, according to the N. C. Wildlife Resources Commission.

How many hours, if any, will be lopped off the Mattamuskeet vicinity shooting days will be determined by a public hearing set for 3:00 p. m. Wednesday, October 25, at the Swanquarter courthouse.

Attending the hearing will be the Commission's waterfowl committee, staff members, and hopefully a large number of interested waterfowl hunters. The hearing comes as a result of recent approval granted by the federal Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife to reduce the number of daily shooting hours on the Lake and surrounding areas.

The 1967 General Assembly authorized the Wildlife Resources Commission to shorten Mattamuskeet area shooting days provided a written recommendation was received from the Federal Director responsible for waterfowl management.

Any decision resulting from the hearing will be announced by the Commission in advance of the opening of the goose season on November 6. One apparent reason for reduced shooting time is to reduce the kill of a declining waterfowl population in the Mattamuskeet area, and one proposal would cut off shooting at 4:00 p. m. daily.
