Painting Classes To Begin

July 8

"Painting in the Mountains" announces the opening of its third summer of classes to be held in Burnsville from July 8 through August 10. In addition to the regular adult classes, the instructors, John Bryans and Everett Kivette, will offer Saturday morning classes from 9 to 12 for young people from the age of eight to fourteen. These children's classes will begin on July 13 and continue through August 10. Students will be given instructions in both drawing and painting (oil and watercolor), and those from the age of twelve to fourteen who prove themselves to be more advanced or who advance quickly and who the instructors feel could benefit from the adult classes will be offered the chance to enter those classes on a half or full day basis, five days a week.

The instructors of "Painting in the Mountains" are interested in finding and encouraging children with artistic talent in the Burnsville area. Last summer a number of parents in the area made inquiries about children's classes, but it was impossible to arrange for them on such short notice. Several young people of junior high and high school ages were, however, admitted to the regular classes, and they proved to be remarkably talented. Their seriousness, good will, and excellent work became the inspiration of the adult members of the class. The achievement of these students has given the instructors added incentive to offer this year, as their own "pilot" program, the special children's classes described above. They will also offer again this summer two "scholarships" to young people of high school age for the regular full week course. Miss Mizzi Pressnell of Newdale already holds one of these. The other is still open to interested students from the Burnsville area.

Parents interested in the children's classes or in the student scholarship for the regular classes can make inquiries at the "Summer Gallery" behind the Nu-Way Inn or at the Inn after June 15. The fee for the children's classes will be $10 for five Saturdays.
