Community Get-Together

By Julie Heckart

When many of our summer folks have arrived, its good to see them. We had our first get-together at the Community Hall in Cattail on Saturday evening, May 30. It was a jolly affair with lots of good food as usual. George Porter sure knows how to cook juicy hamburgers! The Deweys were in charge and did a fine job. 28 were present, all are looking forward to the next picnic. Cards were enjoyed afterward with a good fire in the fireplace, real cheerful and friendly. Something new has been added, I'm told we will have garbage collection once a week in these hills!

Tips On Warranties

With this unit, the cost of service labor is included.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.— Almost every home appliance or similar product sold in America today comes with a guarantee certifying workmanship, quality and performance.

Every consumer should insist upon a guarantee and read it before making a decision, according to John W. Miller, general parts and service manager of Philco-Ford Corporation.

The consumer should not rely upon the salesman to explain the guarantee, Miller cautioned.

He said product guarantees appear to be more effective if they contain these elements:

- Coverage of the entire product, not just some of the components.
- Coverage of certain costly parts, such as the picture tube in a color television set, for longer periods.
- Coverage of certain very durable components, such as the sealed refrigeration system in an air conditioner, for up to five years.
- Inclusion, at no extra charge, of the cost of service labor for a specific period.

- Instruction on how the consumer can obtain factory-authorized service to protect the guarantee.

- Simple language, without conflicting provisions which tend to cancel one another.

- National coverage, protecting the consumer wherever he may move in the future.

Manufacturers, Miller said, have learned by experience that quality products can be covered by inclusive guarantees to protect the consumer, and the better manufacturers are willing to extend such guarantees.

Philco-Ford, he said, has adopted a guarantee of product performance which incorporates all of those features and covers every Philco-brand product being sold today for use in the home.
