Post Office Implements Law - Will Make List

The nations 32,000 post offices today began accepting applications from people who want their names added to a list of persons to whom a ds coming within a statutory definition of "sexually oriented " advertisements may not be mailed.

At the same time, the Postal Service began compiling a master list of those who apply for the mail ban; the first list to be available to mailers about February 20. Sexually oriented ads may not be mailed to those appearing on the list for 30 days or more. The law, a part of the Postal Reorganization Act, carries severe civil and criminal penalties for violators.

Detailed instructions have been issued from postal headquarters in Washington advis ing post offices how to implement this law. Some of the highlights are:

Postmasters will designate specific locations for receipt of the applications at postal facilities under their jurisdiction.

The forms contain easy to-follow instructions but clerks will assist custo mers, upon request, in filling them out. And, if a local supply accept as valid a customer's application written on any piece of paper.

A customer physically incapable of filing an applica tion personally at the post office may have one mailed to him by the postmaster, upon request.

Each form contains an identifying number which should be retained by the applicant for further reference; if, for example, he wishes to notify the postmaster that he has received sexually-oriented ads after being on the list for more than 30 days. A person's name will remain on the list for 5 years, but, if he wants his name removed, he needs only to advise his postmaster in writing, giving his application number.

Witnesses Term Hit-And-Run Accident A 'Close Call'

A few moments after stepping out of a school bus, a first grade pupil was struck and knocked down by a hit-and-run driver Monday afternoon on West Main Street at the foot of Church Street.

The victim was Linda Hess, age six, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hess. Her injuries, consisting of bruises and abrasions, were not serious, although witnesses declared the accident was an extremely close call to far more serious results.

Police, who have a description of the car involved, are hoping to make an arrest, but unfortunately witnesses failed to get the car license number.

Main Street, west of the Yancey Hospital, is danger ous for children because of frequent speeding cars. Two years ago Linda's sister Ann was struck and injured at almost the identical spot. The Burnsville police have given tickets to several speeders on this street, but the dangerous speeding continues. The Town Board has instructed police to make special efforts to ticket the offending motorists.

Concern was expressed following the meeting that such a fine beginning be continued until the views expressed were accomplished. One means of working more closely together that has already received discussion was a "Yancey Christians United". Through its formation, a combination of Churches and individuals of all Faiths could work in cooperation with each other and the Social Agencies. What do you think?

This question will be the topic of an open meeting at the First Presbyterian Church, Burnsville, on Thursday, February 11 at 7:30 p.m. The public is cordially invited to attend.
