

Parkway Playhouse Opens Soon

Parkway Playhouse, a unique summer theatre which combines college courses with all phases of play production, will launch its 25th anniversary season this summer. A featured attraction in Burnsville, Parkway is operated through the theatre program of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

The 25th anniversary season will get under way July 7 with the production of "Cyrano De Bergerac." The play, written by Edmond Rostand, will be directed by Lauren Woods, who once again will serve as co-manager of Parkway. The play will continue through July 10.

Parkway's managing director, J. Gordon Greene of the UNC-G Drama Department faculty, is particularly looking forward to the Cyrano production. Not only will it mark the beginning of another summer at Parkway for Gordon, but it will also mark an end to his three years of self-imposed "retirement" from acting.

J. Gordon Greene

Gordon says he plans to play the part of Cyrano in the opening production. He was a professional actor for quite a few years before he became an assistant professor of drama at UNC-G in September of 1969.

This year's schedule at Parkway is as follows: "Cyrano De Bergerac," by Edmond Rostand, July 7-10; "Lovers," by Brian Friel, July 14-17; "You Can't Take It With You" by Kaufman and Hart, July 21-24; "Dracula" by Hamilton Dean and John Balderston, July 28-31; "Bus Stop," by William Inge, August 4-7; "Oklahoma," by Rodgers and Hammerstein, August 11-14.

The complete staff at Parkway has not been selected yet, but Larry Alford, drama director at Chipola Junior College in Florida, will be back as the publicity director. In addition, James Parker, a faculty member at Catawba College, will be designer. The company will consist of approximately 30 students this summer with staff and faculty members pushing the total to 40 members, according to Greene.
