For And About Homemakers

By Mary M. Deyton
University Days on Wheels, a new concept in Tar Heel extension education has captured the imagination of 736 homemakers.

The educational program, slated for November 13-18, will combine tours with lectures and cultural events in the New York City and Washington, D.C. areas.

State Agent Ada Dalla Pozza, who is in charge of the event, says visits include a stop at Rossmore, a new concept in retirement living; Columbia, a planned city; the Winterthur Museum and Longwood Gardens at the Dupont estate outside Wilmington, Delaware, and the Lancaster, Pennsylvania Dutch area.

In New York City, homemakers will see the Good Housekeeping Institute, J.C. Penny testing facilities, Burlington House, Rivendale Fabrics and The Cloisters, and have lectures by representatives from Standard Brands, Consumer's Union, and Coats and Clark.

Other states who have heard about University Days on Wheels are interested in our evaluation, Mrs. Dalla Pozza added. "But so far as we know," she said, "North Carolina is the first state to try an educational tour on such a large scale."

Homemakers scheduled to attend from Yancey County include: Mrs. C. B. Gillespie, Miss Zoe Young, Mrs. Ralph Jacks, Mrs. P.C. Coletta.

Flock fabrics have been in existence for the last 45 years. In its infant stage the fabric was plagued by lack of design durability in wear performance as cleaning performance.

Things have changed. Flocked fabrics have come of age thru refinement and new technology.

Any unfavorable association with flock fabrics of old should not deter the consumer from considering the new variations on the market. Improvements in quality and performance include good abrasion resistance, washability, breathability, softer hand (feel) and drape-ability. These innovations are brought about by:

--using new adhesives for holding the flocking fibers onto the face fabric.

--better control with electrostatic equipment (equipment that applies fibers to face fabric) --improved dyeing and finishing techniques.

Styling has also radically changed. The "sameness" of flock fabric has disappeared. Newest looks include the printed variety, flock-one-flock patterns, perfection of ribbed look, and seersucker effects. With the holiday season coming up what will look more festive than a velveteen like flocked garment at half the price of regular velveteen.

Even though the new flocked fabrics are termed washable, be sure to read and follow care instructions given on the garment label.
