Using Logical Consequences

One principle of child rearing that is supported by most parent educators is the use of logical consequences. The principle is "no person will willingly do what he believes is harmful to himself." In relating to a child the parent allows the growing person to experience the logical consequences of his behavior. Sometimes the consequences are bad, sometimes good.

Example: "Joseph, age 2, stepped in a mud puddle and got his shoes wet. He came into the house for dry clothes. When he asked to go out again, his shoes were not yet dry and therefore he was unable to go. In a matter-of-fact way he was told by his mother, "I'm sorry, but your shoes are still wet."

Note Of Appreciation

We would like to express our sincere thanks and appreciation to all our friends and relatives for the kindness and sympathy shown to us in our time of sorrow.

--The family of Mrs. Ruby Clontz Hall.

We would like to express our appreciation to our many friends and relatives who extended their sympathy in our recent bereavement. The visits to the hospital, the gifts of food, the lovely flowers and cards. Your kindness has been so helpful and all you have done for us will remain a cherished memory.

--The family of Milus Higgins

We want to extend our sincere appreciation to all our friends and neighbors for their many acts of love and kindness shown toward us in our bereavement.

--The Ralph Fox family.
