Tobacco Will Be Analyzed

Random samples of tobacco will be chemically analyzed for indications of DDT, TDE, toxaphene or endrin, according to W.T. Reece, State Executive Director for the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service. The samples will be taken at tobacco warehouses.

Before being issued tobacco marketing cards, producers must certify whether or not DDT, TDE, toxaphene or endrin were used. Reece reminded growers that it is a violation of law to make false certification regarding these pesticides. Tobacco marketing cards are issued by the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS).

Since tobacco is mixed in the redrying and packing process, use of any of these pesticides by even a few producers can affect tobacco from many farms. Reece said that finding DDT, TDE, toxaphene or endrin residue could result in loss of important markets. Several major buyers have indicated concern about the level of undesirable pesticides in their purchases, according to notices Reece has received from ASCS headquarters at the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Washington, D.C.

"It is very much to the beneficial interest of every tobacco grower in North Carolina to use only acceptable pesticides," Reece said. He expressed hope that the chemical analyses of tobacco samples from local warehouses would show no residue from the pesticides.

Take This Gambler's Quiz

Will you be one of the estimated 50,000 people who will find out this summer what gambling with lawn mower safety is all about? Take this quick quiz to see if you're eligible.

1—Do you neglect to remove sticks and stones before mowing the lawn? 2—Do you walk close behind the machine where your toes can be nipped if an object suddenly stops it? 3—Do you use a riding mower on wet hillsides even though it may tip over? 4—Do you clean grass from under the machine when the engine hasn't been turned off completely?

A "yes" to any one of these questions means you're a gambler. Remember, it only takes one mistake to cause a serious injury.

Deneen Land-Reclamation Project

[Cont'd from page 1] trial waste." Individual industries have found, to their dismay, that they are completely on their own in finding ways to comply with government pollution control standards—which are constantly changing anyway. And because the mica industry is a unique one, no experts are likely to be created, which means the companies are forced to work by trial and error—an expensive process.

Deneen is in the process of installing an air scrubber which, hopefully, will take 99.4% of air pollutants (mica particles) out of the air, or exhaust, that is released after drying the mica.

"We expect the scrubber to work, said Wilkins, but as with all such things, we'll know better when we use it. This is the third change to be made at Deneen to cope with air problems.

The water pollution problem has been taken care of for some time, as Deneen uses no chemicals in its flotation process that are harmful to water or to marine life. The method used is simply to change the Ph, or specific gravity, of the water which causes the mica to float. The river which passes the Deneen Mica Company is classified as trout water before it reaches the mining operation, and is still classified as trout water when the mica flotation process is completed.

"We believe in land reclamation," stated Wilkins, "and Deneen has a record of 'firsts' in this area in working with environmental specialists for solutions to the constant problem of providing the nation with raw materials without destroying the land from which it comes."
