Cuz's Corner
 by Bagley
 Back in June when I was critically ill --- well, I was --- I got a Get Well Card from a lady. Only she didn't hope I'd soon be well, what she did was: She said she wanted to be the first to wish me a Merry Christmas. The reason I think she done that was she figured I was a GONER and she didn't want me to have to leave without being wished a Merry Christmas. I reckon that's good, but I don't know what for. Anyhow, I'm gonna reply to her get well, I mean her Christmas, card in my column cause I think folks oughta know about people like her.

 Dear Mrs. Ed: Indeed, you were the first to wish me a Merry Christmas, etc. I have heard of thoughtful people in my time but you are without peer as the "most thoughtful." Now your card certainly put me to thinking about that season of good cheer. It also caused me to begin doing my Christmas worrying a lot sooner and that is on the minus side of the ledger. Christmas is on the same side. But it may have some minor advantages, too, in that since I have begun on that worrying this early maybe I can spread it a lot thinner over the distance, thereby resulting in less of a pile up right at the last minute. What usually happens is that I wait too late to get started on this worrying and Christmas comes and goes before I can get it all done to save my life. There is always a little bit of that worrying left over and it builds up a backlog sorta like the surplus of farm products and the national debt. I estimate that I am, at least, twenty-five years behind with all this worrying right now.
 Another thing I am already worrying about is how many shopping days til Christmas. This is a perennial problem with me and I don't see why some enterprising calendar manufacturer doesn't put that information on his calendars. You know, so that anytime you look at it you can see how many shopping days are left.
 Most newspapers start carrying this information along toward the tail end of the year and I'm always a devoted reader of that particular section when they begin printing it. As soon as I get my paper that's always the first thing I read. It's not that I'm so interested in knowing how many days I have left to go out and buy a lot of presents for folks that I know won't send me one, rather, it's just that I want to know how many more days that misery is gonna last. I'll bet there are lots of other folks that are devoted readers of that item just like me.
 I think newspapers are overlooking a good thing by not carrying this information the year round. They could have it cover a pretty big space on a page and then sell some real prime ad space all around it. Then when all of us folks that look forward to reading this so many shopping days thing, when we found it, and read it we couldn't help but see all these ads. And as the demand for this particular ad space increased they could diminish the area used to tell us how many days were left. Pretty soon I imagine they would have to leave off the number of days left information altogether, but they would have to insert an Editor's Note in this space saying something like this, you know so you wouldn't get lost: The information usually found in this space, relative to the number of shopping days left until Christmas, can be found on page so and so. Then you see, the same idea could be followed on the said page so and so.
 You can readily see that this idea has endless potential. To tell you the truth, I'm surprised that somebody in the newspaper racket, I mean business, hasn't thought of this already.
 I sure hope that some of
