We had six winners identifying the "Handlebars" belonging to Blaine Stalcup, all postmarked the same. Others were right but were late while many were wrong. One entry said the mustache belonged to a lady in Hayesville. Congratulations winners, your one years free subscription to the Scout will start next week. The winners are: Shirley Massey, Nada Pullium, Frank Curtis, J. V. Hogan, Mrs. Delain Morris, and Bertice Cooke.

The 47th annual Cherokee County Fair will be the top of entertainment here next week and with the Jaycee willing to let the public _ throw baseballs at us we're just dying laughing. Bud Penland, Chairman of the "Duck-A-Jaycee" project, came around asking for volunteers to sit on the trap door, quickly pointed at me and said "you'll do." We just know, "shudder", that there - is enough people wanting to throw something at us that we'll get plenty wet. EX-AMPLE - my wife.

Up in Pennsylvania a firm has developed a chair for executives which upon pressing a button, heats up the back of the chair, and gives the occupant a massage. Wonder if they plan to attach an arm which will swing out and hold his head while he makes a big decision?

"Dunk-A-Jaycee "

MURPHY - A new attraction form of 3 balls for a quarter, at the Cherokee County Fair this year will be a "Dunk-A- Jaycee" game sponsored by the local club.

The Murphy Jaycees have been busy this past week constructing a portable tank that will hold about 1200 gallons of water and a trap door mechanism.

Here's how it works. A "Trap door" seat will be erected about 3 feet above a tank of water which is surrounded by wire with a target off to the side.

Members of the local club will take turns sitting on the trap door and chances, in the will be sold to the public. When the target is hit the trap door opens and the Jaycee will splash in the water. The tank is 4 feet deep allowing the unlucky Jaycee to go completely under water.

The attraction will be open from 6 p.m. to 12 p.m. Monday through Saturday. A special kiddie day is in the planning for Thursday with reduced rates. Economic Development Puts New Demands On Local Government

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a series of five articles concerning the work groups of the Upper Hiawassee Watershed Development Association and their findings in a recent inventory of five counties in the Upper Hiwassee Valley. The five counties are Cherokee and Clay in North Carolina and Union, Towns and Fannin in Georgia.) Industrialization and ecomomic development put new demands on local government services. Plant location experts and workers look for areas with good roads, good schools, adequate health and recreation facilities, a pleasing appearance, police and fire protection, and other marks of a progressive community.

As part of the inventory of its institutional resources, the Upper Hiawassee Watershed Development Association has surveyed governmental services and finances in this 5

Local government in the valley is the responsibility of five counties - two in North Carolina and hree in Georgiaand nine municipalities.

The five counties spend $4.5 million a year to provide ser-vices for the area. Most of the revenue comes from federal and state aid. Property taxes and tax equivalents rank second, followed by miscellaneous local sources license, fees, and fines. Spending per person amounts to some $96, with school costs accounting for $65 of that amount. Per capita property tax levies average $21.

There are Il towns in the area. Two, Culberson, N. C., and Morganton, Ga., are in-active, collecting no revenues and providing no services. Murphy is the largest municipality with a 1960 population of 2,235. Only four of the towns have populations of more than 1,000.

The services which are generally provided include police and fire protection, streets and street lighting, and gar-bage collection. All the towns have electric power service. Nine have water systems. Four have sewerage systems in operation, and two have them under construction. None operates a school system.

The towns spent $290,000 in fiscal year 1963, which is an average of $32 per capita. More than 60 percent of municipal revenues came from property taxes and tax equivalents. Miscellaneous local sources accounted for 28 per cent, and state aid for 11 per cent. Property tax levies average nearly $25 per Neither the towns nor the counties are burdened with debts.

Murphy and Andrews, N.C., have active city planning programs. Technical assistance for these programs is provided on a contract basis by the Western North Carolina Regional Planning Commiss-ion and is paid for by local funds supplemented by fedeeral funds. Clay and Cherokee Counties have planning agencies which have been working primarily with the Area Redevelopment Administration. Union and Towns Counties are part of the 12-county Georgia Mountains Regional Planning and Development Commission. The comission has set up an office in Gainesville and has contracted for three studies: recreation potential, transpor-tation and highway needs, and industrial site surveys. Funds for its programs come equally from the state and local con-
