SOCIAL SECURITY Questions And Answers

Q. They say that a person must have so many points under Social Security to be eligible for retirement benefits. Is there a simple way to tell, or to figure, how many points we'll need?

A. Yes, there is. In general the number of points or work credits (called "quarters of coverage") that each of you will need to be "insured" for retirement benefits depends on your date of birth.

This is the general rule: You need 1 "quarter of coverage" for every year after 1950 (or after the year in which you became 21, if later) and up to the year you reach "retirement age"--65 if you're a man, 62 if a woman. To get the year you'll reach retirement age just add 65 or 62, as applicable, to your year of birth.

Then simply subtract 1951 (or the year you 22, if later) from the year you'll be 65 (or 62). And that's your answer--except that if the number is greater than 40, reduce it to 40. That's because of another eligibility rule for retirement benefits: If you have 40 or more quarters of coverage you're "insured for life."

Q. We keep reading and hearing that a person should sign up for Medicare in one of the three months before the month he reaches 65. But we've also heard or read that he has a 7-month period in which to sign up. Please explain.

A. It's true that technically one has 7 months in which to sign up or enroll for the full Medicare protection. That 7-month period consists of the 3 months before he is 65. The month of becoming 65 and the 3 months after that month. But unless he enrolls in one of the three months before the month of his 65th birthday, he will not have this protection beginning with that month.

If he waits until the month he reaches 65, or one of the three following months, to apply--the protection will be delayed for 1 to 3 months. And should he delay filing until after the 7-month period he would have lost the chance to enroll for this protection, at least until the next "general enrollment period"--which might mean a wait of up to 2 years.

TOWNSON FUNERAL HOME
MURPHY ROBBINSVILLE

Dear friends,

"Sorrowing people need to talk", says a psychologist. "Friends worry about their ability to say the right things. They ought to worry about their ability to listen." "If the warmth of your presence can get your bereaved friend to start talking, keep quiet and listen." "If your friend has said a hundred words to your one, you've helped a lot."

Respectfully,
Dave Townson
