

CUZ'S CORNER

By Bagley

If you are a cat lover then I probably won't have you as a reader of this column any longer after you read this. I kinda hate to lose all the cat lovers as readers of this mess but I have to get this off my chest, and take the consequences.

Of all the domestic animals I think an ole cat is the sorriest of the lot. And of all the sorry cats in the world I reckon we always had the very worst ones at our house.

Cats have caused me trouble nearly as far back as I can remember. My sister, Evelyn, used to adopt every old stray one that came around and this always added to my difficulties. It was me who was forever in hot water on their account. I kept trying to keep the cat population within reasonable limits at our house but it was a losing battle. Why for the least little thing that I did to them ole cats this sister would beat like a stuck pig and run squalling to Mama. Mama'd make me cut it out so Evelyn would shut her mouth.

loose. Both of them ole cats headed for the tall timbers. One of them, the old yellow brindled tom, we never saw again from that day till this. In 8 or 10 days, though, the old gray tom showed up at the barn just at milking time. Anyhow, Mama tore me up good and proper for that deal. She jerked a gallery bush out of the brush broom and wore it out me, and it was real dry and seasoned, too. Mama's sense of humor seemed to have completely deserted her.

Every time we killed hogs I would get the bladders, put a red in the end of em and blow em up, then hang em on the fence to dry. They made the finest kind of balloons you ever seen.

That ole tom, the one that was left over from the clothes line, had done got sorta tamed up by hog killing time. So, when my hog bladder got dried out good I took a few dry peas and dropped em inside, blowed it up good an tight and tied off the end. Soon as I could get my hands on ole tom I tied it to his tail, rattled them peas a little, and he was ready!

He began running. He went around the house about 3 times gaining speed as he went and hollering every breath. Finally he got straightened out across the field and was GONE. He came to a wire fence and just went through it. That bladder busted, sounded like a blunderbuss shotgun and that was the last time anybody EVER saw that cat.

Soon as Evelyn missed him she accused me of doing something to him. I's still so tickled over how he got gone so I told her about it. She told Mama on me and she wore me out again.

Sometime later I tied a bunch of dry corn shucks to another one's tail. He didn't do nothing. So, I thought I'd just set fire to em to see if that'd excite him any. It did. This is, I suppose, where the old expression of "lighting a shuck" came from.

And, of all places for a crazy cat to run to, this one ran right under the barn. There were a lot of dry shucks, corncobs, hay, and stuff like that under there and, naturally, it caught fire immediately. I knew I's in for it but I hollered for help. Mama had one of the little younguns to ring the big dinner bell to summon the neighbors and the rest of us got busy. I climbed under there and began raking out hay, shucks and everything.

Somebody began throwing water on the fire and we had it out pretty quick, but not before I had my eyebrows and hair singed to a fare you well, and both hands blistered.

After all the excitement was over Papa blistered another place on me. Then Mama lectured me on being kind to dumb animals. Later I heard her expressing some doubt about whether she'd ever be able to raise the rest of the younguns, or me either, just on account of me.

Now you see the trouble, just some of it, that sorry cats have always caused me.
