Poultry Parasite Circular Revised

Extension Circular No. 160, "Common Parasites of Poultry," has just been revised by the State College Extension Service and copies are available on request.

The circular is 12 pages in length and contains a number of illustrations. It was prepared by B. F. Cox of the Poultry Department and Reinard Harkema of the Division of Biological Sciences.

The authors say external and internal parasites are a serious problem in poultry production. In North Carolina, they add, the problem is becoming more serious each year.

External parasites discussed include the chicken mite, feather mite, depluming mite, scaly leg mite, tropical fowl mite, stick-tight flea, and lice. Included in the section on internal parasites are large round worms and tapeworms.

Single copies of "Common Parasites of Poultry" may be obtained from the local county cations Department, N. C. State agent or by writing the Publication, Raleigh.

Dairy Herd Improvement Association cows in North Carolina last year averaged 8,642 pounds of milk containing 364 pounds of butterfat. The milk production average was 92 per cent higher and the butterfat 82 per cent higher than the average for all cows in the State.

The new Maryland No. 1 breed of hog which was established in 1941 carries approximately 62 per cent Landrace and 38 per cent Berkshire blood.

More than 600 of the special plant introductions of the USDA during 1951 offer promise as sources for Cortisome, the drug used in treating arthritis and other ills.
